Hospital Says Condition of Secretary of War Is 'Alarming.'

Roosevelt Visits His Stricken Aid

Cabinet Member's Son Is Called From Chicago to Walter Reed.

The condition of Secretary of War George H. Dern was described as "alarming" last night. He is in Walter Reed Hospital suffering from heart and kidney complications growing out of influenza.

Members of the family were afraid Secretary Dern's heart might not be able to bear the strain of his long illness.

The 64-year-old Cabinet officer suffered a severe attack of influenza in Salt Lake about five years ago, when he was serving his second term as Governor of Utah.

Stricken Second Time.

The disease struck him again last April while he was on an inspection tour of the Atlantic intracoastal waterway. He was in Charleston, S. C., at the time. He went on to Miami and from there flew back to Washington to enter Walter Reed.

Leaving the hospital six weeks later, he began an inspection tour of engineer projects on the Delaware River in Pennsylvania. In mid-July he suffered a relapse and was returned to Walter Reed.

Uremia poisoning set in about two weeks ago, adding to the other complications. However, it was believed that he was recovering until Monday, when his condition took a serious turn.

Stay at Bedside.

Mrs. Dern and Secretary Dern's children, Mrs. Harry Baxter and Betsy, James and William Dern, are at the bedside almost constantly. John, who is on the way, has been practicing law in Chicago.

Meantime, in Salt Lake City, the Associated Press reported, mining executives and grizzled ore diggers alike were watching reports on their friend's progress.

To them he is plain "George," a likeable fellow who rose from clerk in a mining company to be a mine owner, banker and twice Governor of Utah.

Heat Kills Baby, 2 Others Stricken; Rain Brings Relief

A 7month-old baby died and two persons were prostrated yesterday as a humid 96-degree heat beat down on the city until a late thundershower brought relief. At 10:30 last night night the mercury registered only 71.

The dead infant is Leo Ralph Davis, of 3557 Sixth street northwest. His body, lying in his tiny bed, was found by his mother. Doctors said his death was caused by the heat.

High temperatures and excessive humidity had closed the District Building, Smithsonian Institution and Department of Commerce hours ahead of schedule.

Further relief was forecast by the Weather Bureau, which predicted that showers both today and tomorrow would keep the thermometer at a "moderate" level.

Perspiring Washingtonians who ruefully discovered yesterday that the weather man was in error—he had forecast weather cooler with possible showers—will have an opportunity today to give him another chance.

High Court Asked To Hear Itch Case

By the Associated Press.

The Supreme Court was asked yesterday for a ruling on whether the second mate of the vessel Covena contracted the itch from the ship's cook.

The Hammond Lumber Co. of Oregon, owner of the vessel, which operates between Pacific Coast and Gulf of Mexico ports, appealed from a ruling by the Oregon Supreme Court awarding Ralph Compton, the mate, $1,000.

State courts held the shipowner should have made a physical examination of the crew before the vessel sailed, to ascertain if anyone had a contagious disease.

In its petition to the Supreme Court here, the lumber company asserted:

"There was no evidence that Compton had the itch;

"There was no evidence that the cook had the itch;

"There was no evidence that Compton got it from the cook;

"Or that, if the cook had the itch, the shipowner knew of it before the ship left port so he could do anything about it."

The court will announce in October whether it will review the controversy.

Fat Years and Lean

New Deal Apparently Does Not Intend to Drop Crop Control Plan.

By Robert C. Albright.

One fact is apparent in the face of the drought, in the face of vanishing farm surpluses, in the face of higher food prices and rising food imports, and in the face of the Supreme Court's AAA decision, and that is—those in charge of Administration farm policy have not abandoned their goal of production control.

ROBERT C. ALBRIGHT.

Assuming President Roosevelt is re-elected, they have dubious hope of attaining it through State-aid provisions of the soil conservation act, to become effective January 1, 1938. But they fear the decentralized nature of a Federal-State co-operative plan will be cumbersome and unwieldy, and view it at best as an experiment worth trying.

A drive toward the old AAA objective of "balanced production" is expected at the next session of Congress through Administration proposals, now in the mill, linking crop insurance with Secretary Wallace's "ever normal granary plan," and dovetailing both of these into State control of farm production, in co-operation with the Federal Government, under machinery set up in the soil conservation act.

Returning to the United States after his recent European trip, Chester Davis, former farm administrator, expressed to Secretary Wallace, in the words of the Secretary, his strong conviction that the mechanism of production control should be available in case of need." Even after the 1934 drought had burned a deeper hole into farm surpluses than AAA had been able to, Secretary Wallace declared it his opinion that "an interlude in production control would soon throw our farm economy into chaos again."

Revival of the "ever normal granary plan" and proposals for crop insurance with "premiums" paid in kind, is coincident with demands that the Administration, which has left drought outside the pale of its past planning, recognizes drought's recent frequent recurrence, and take preparedness measures. But many see in both plans the seeds of return to production control, through indirect media.

Coupled with these two proposals in the Administration's new venture in drought as well as crop planning, the AAA is studying possible renewal of commodity loans, especially in years of excessive supplies, and extension of Government purchase of land "which definitely should never have been plowed."

For the present spreading drought of 1936, following on the heels of the drought of 1934, both of which in the opinion of some have demonstrated the futility of Governmental control, actually has operated to

Ruhland Asks City to Double Health Funds

By James D. Secrest.

Asking more than twice the amount of money carried in current appropriations, Health Officer George C. Ruhland proposed construction of two public health centers at a cost of $500,000, expansion of laboratory activities and consolidation of them under one director, and substantial increases for clinics, medical services in the schools and educational campaigns in 1938 Health Department estimates, the District Commissioners disclosed yesterday.

Seeking to raise the per capita expenditure for public health from 85 cents to $1.88, Dr. Ruhland requested $1,117,492, as against the current appropriation of $507,970.

In justification of this jump in public health expenditures, the health officer cited the unfavorable mortality rate of the District, when compared with those of cities of like size, and pointed out that a per capita budget of $1.88 "is still far under the American public health standard for city health work, which after years of research into budgets of cities throughout the United States, has been set at from $1.96 to $2.37 per capita."

New Employes Asked.

The health department estimates provide for 57 new employes at a cost of $95,174 and do not make allowance for the personnel of the proposed health centers.

Eventually the District should have five public health centers, Dr. Ruhland explained, each serving an approximate population of from 120,000 to 150,000.

"With the growth of cities the establishment of district or regional health centers has become a well-recognized feature for the efficient promotion of modern health work," he said.

"Such health centers are planned to provide facilities for diagnosis, consultation and treatment of clientele that is to be served. The building provides housing for a group of public health nurses and welfare workers together with clerical staff attached to these services."

The general plan for such health centers, Dr. Ruhland added, has become fairly well standardized. Local needs call for a three-story building with basement of fireproof construction, air-conditioned, and having approximate dimensions of 100 by 50 by 50 feet.

Explaining that each building would cost $250,000, Dr. Ruhland said: "Such a building program might be undertaken with Federal assistance through the PWA."

Terms Outlay Inadequate.

Prefacing his estimates, Dr. Ruhland declared that "expenditure of money for public health in the District of Columbia has been inadequate for a number of years.

"Within the past ten years the expenditure for public health has never exceeded $1.09 (1931), which is very much below recognized health standards. This has been probably due to the lack of the proper appreciation of certain mass factors that cause disease and death, particularly is this true with reference to disease prevention and health promotion.

"The lack of proper appreciation of all the factors which enter into the causation of disease and death in the District is reflected in the mortality statistics of the District, as compared with the rest of the country.

"For instance, the crude death rate for the District in the calendar year 1935, which includes deaths from all causes, was 14.29 per 1,000 population, as compared with 11 for

Byrnes Swamps Rivals in S. C.; Harrison Wins

Roosevelt Backers Easy Victors; Gasque and Taylor Ahead.

By the Associated Press.

Two Administration chieftains in the Senate won easily yesterday in primary elections in South Carolina and Mississippi.

Senator James F. Byrnes, in a three-man contest in South Carolina's Democratic primary had 142,172 votes from 944 out of 1,474 precincts. Thomas P. Stoney, former mayor of Charleston, had 14,483 and W. C. Harllee, retired Marine colonel, had 7,107.

In Mississippi Senator Pat Harrison, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and one of the guiding hands on Administration fiscal affairs, on returns from 759 of the State's 1,659 precincts had 73,562 votes. Sennett Conner received 33,868 votes, a majority for Harrison of 39,694.

In California the Townsend Old-Age Pension movement had echoes in 20 primary contests for House seats. Townsend organization indorsements cut across party lines in those contests.

Columbia, S. C., Aug. 25.—A close race developed in the Fourth District in the South Carolina Democratic primary tonight where four candidates sought the seat in Congress made vacant by the recent death of Representative John J. McSwain. In the three other districts where there were contests the incumbents had apparently safe leads.

With 45 of 250 precincts in the Fourth District reported, G. Heyward Mahon, jr., Greenville merchant, held a slight margin over Claude A. Taylor, Spartanburg lawyer and speaker of the State House of Representatives, while Joseph R. Bryson, Greenville attorney, was a close third. Solicitor

Straus Quits Post at Paris; Bullitt Named

Transfer of Successor From Soviet to France Linked to Unrest.

By Sidney Olson.

President Roosevelt yesterday accepted the resignation of Jesse I. Straus, United States Ambassador to France, and immediately appointed William C. Bullitt, present Ambassador to the Soviet Union, to the post in Paris.

The move, coupled with the appointment of William Phillips, former Undersecretary of State, as Ambassador to Italy, placed two of America's diplomatic aces in the European "tight spots."

Straus' resignation, handed in by doctors' orders, ended a 3½ year diplomatic career for the New York department store magnate, who left the presidency of R. H. Macy & Co., for the American Embassy in France, after doing yeoman work for President Roosevelt in New York in 1932.

Foresees Victory.

In his letter of resignation, dated August 18, from Mount Kisco, N. Y., Mr. Straus, who fainted at a recent parade in Paris, said:

"* * * I give up my post with regret * * * Though my official association with your Administration is, I fear, ended, my interest in the campaign will continue unabated, and I only wish I were well enough to take an active part, as I did in 1932. However, all the indications are favorable and the country will show its appreciation of your courage, initiative and foresight."

The President's letter, addressing the former Ambassador as "My dear Jesse," said:

"I want you to feel that your health is for the moment the most important consideration and that you must take the complete rest which the doctors have ordered. Furthermore, if this Administration shall be continued for another four years, I shall count on your returning as a part of it."

The President, in announcing the resignation of Straus and its acceptance, warned newsmen not to begin speculating on the identity of his successor in France, because of the necessity of obtaining an agreement from the French government. In some cases, when a person is named by the President the other government in question objects to him, and there is a some resulting embarrassment if the person's name has been discussed in the newspapers.

Action Speedy.

However, in this case the agreement was apparently swiftly obtained from France, as the announcement of Bullitt as successor to Straus followed within five min-

County to Convert W.,B.&A. Roadbed Into Route to D. C.

The Prince Georges County of Commissioners yesterday decided to purchase and convert into a highway the roadbed of the abandoned W. B. & A. Railroad between Washington and Bowie, Md.

Action was taken after a group of citizens presented a petition requesting the purchase. The petition bore the names of several hundred persons who live along the right of way.

The resolution the commissioners adopted read:

"The board will enter negotiations with the proper authorities to secure the right of way of the W. B. & A. roadbed from the District of Columbia line to Bowie (near the race track)—a distance of about 12 miles."

"Procedure for said negotiations will be referred to Ogle Barbury, counsel, for recommendations."

Since abandonment of the line last year, pressure has been brought to bear upon officials for establishment of a new highway between Washington and Baltimore. It was said the route was the shortest distance between the two cities. Construction of the road to Bowie would mean the development of more than a third of this plan.

Madrid Fall Near, Towns Captured, Claim of Rebels

Reported in Flight

PRESIDENT MANUEL AZANA.

Battles Raging on All Fronts; Report Azana Has Fled Denied.

Letter Involves Alfonso in Plot

Government Calls Upon Populace to Stem Moorish Invasion.

The Crisis Abroad.

Rebel forces appeared to be drawing a tightening ring around the loyalist defenses of Madrid.

President Manuel Azana was reported to have fled the capital. Reports broadcast by the rebels said that Azana had gone to Valencia. The government denied the reports.

Loyalists claimed proof that former King Alfonso was involved in the revolt plot.

Fugitives reaching Rome told Vatican authorities of "atrocities" committed by Spanish government supporters in their drive against the Catholic Church.

France studied ways of meeting the threat of the newly-expanded German war machine.

Germany announced it would have 1,132,000 men in military barracks by October 1 under its new conscription program.

By the United Press.

Lisbon (Wednesday), Aug. 26.—Rebel forces appeared to be drawing a tightening ring around the forces of the Leftist Spanish government in Madrid today.

The rebels claimed widespread victories and occupation of several important cities, including San Sebastian. They expected to occupy Irun during the day.

The rebels also asserted they had intercepted radio messages revealing that President Manuel Azana had fled from Madrid and was in Valencia, but this report was denied by a spokesman in the capital, who said the president had returned to Madrid after inspecting loyalist troops along the northern front.

Alfonso Involved in Plot.

Madrid claimed that policemen who searched the belongings of a Monarchist leader had found a letter from former King Alfonso XIII implicating the dethroned monarch in the revolt and stating that he was at the disposition of the rebel forces if they should need him.

The rebel drive was intensified on all fronts shortly after midnight. Loyalists appeared to have been dislodged from the Navalperal region north of Madrid and to be retreating toward the capital.

At Seville, Gen. Miguel Cabanellas, rebel provisional president, said the way to Madrid was open and that anti-government forces were awaiting only an "opportune moment" before entering the capital.

Madrid admitted that terrific fighting was occurring on all fronts and included heavy artillery and aerial bombardments.

Rebel Planes Kill 100.

Rebel airplanes killed more than 100 persons and caused extensive property damage in a bombardment of Irun and San Sebastian.

The Exchange Telegraph also reported that rebel airplanes from Salamanca flew over Madrid again tonight, dropping leaflets informing the population that the city soon would be delivered "from Marxist oppression." No bombs were dropped.

Loyalist airplanes bombed rebels entrenched at Oviedo but failed to dislodge the starving, thirsty garrison.

A fierce struggle raged in Estremadura, southwest of Madrid, where loyalist forces advanced on rebels entrenched at Navalmoral de la Mata. The loyalists attempted to cut the western line of communications between northern and southern rebel armies, chiefly in the hope of preventing the sending of further Moroccan forces to Gen. Emilio Mola, northern insurgent commander.

Fight on Moors Urged.

Madrid, Aug. 25 (AP).—The government tonight called upon the populace to rise against the "Moorish invasion," following reports that Moorish legionnaires, brought to the mainland by Rebels, had increased their activity.

Officials declared, "No mercy will be shown these uncivilized barbarians."

It was asserted in Madrid tonight that 500 Moors had charged govern-

Refugees Tell Of Red Horrors In Spanish War

Murders, Outrages Against Nuns and Burning of Churches Revealed.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Vatican City, Aug. 25.—Hitherto untold horrors of Red atrocities against the Church in Spain, involving massacres, outrages against nuns, murders of bishops and priests and the burning of sacred edifices, were filed officially with the Vatican today.

Details of reports gathered by the Vatican secretariat of state were disclosed by the Osservatore Romano, official Vatican organ.

Church refugees arriving from Spain told Vatican officials that 22 brothers of the Institute of Christian Schools had been killed by Communists during the revolt. Before the revolt, they reported, the institute was the largest in Spain, consisting of 120 schools, attended by 32,000 pupils and employing 1,280 teachers. Most of the schools have been burned or seized for use as barracks, they said.

1,000 Students Escape.

The Vatican organ reported that Communists from Barcelona invaded the College of Buonanova and killed seven teachers. There was no reference to the number of students killed or injured, although 1,000 students and two teachers escaped into Italy.

Osservatore Romano asserted that at Moncado, near Barcelona, Reds executed five brothers in a school, as well as four priests and 40 civilians, while in Madrid province they "ferociously massacred 10 brothers" and imprisoned 54.

Seven brothers from the community of Sanseloni escaped into France disguised as miners and teamsters, the Vatican stated, while at Figueras, Communists stormed a college and, after a fruitless search

Amos 'n' Andy Bow Over Police Radio

Amos 'n' Andy made their debut on a brand new radio station last night—WPDW, Metropolitan Police.

It occurred because Lieut. James Kelly, police radio engineer, wanted to test a new direct connection to all precinct stations, the Fire Department and Commissioners' offices.

Patrolmen cruising in radio cars missed the program, however. The regular Amos 'n' Andy broadcast was picked up on a receiving set in the police dispatcher's room and rebroadcast over the "ground wires."

Policemen in precinct stations and reporters in The Post city room (where there is a direct connection with the police radio system) were no little surprised to hear the famous radio pair speaking in place of the usual staid police announcer.

Roosevelt Off On Trip to View Drought Areas

Train Starts for Bismarck; Glass Says He'll Vote for President.

President Roosevelt, cool and casual in a brown-striped seersucker suit, shoved swiftly through a long day's work yesterday, completing his two-day check-up of the New Deal before he stepped aboard his air-conditioned "Dustbowl Special" train last night for a ten-day tour of the drought areas.

Senator Carter Glass, veteran Virginian conservative, told reporters after a White House conference that he would vote for President Roosevelt in November and even hinted he might make a speech in support of the Administration.

He said:

"I am going to vote for the re-election of the President. Virginia is going Democratic. There has been some disaffection, but not enough to jeopardize the State."

Parleys Begin Tomorrow.

The President's train set forth near midnight for Bismarck, N. Dak. The series of conferences with the Governors of 16 States and Federal and State officials will begin tomorrow.

Significant politically will be the conference on September 1, when Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas, Republican Presidential nominee, will attend one of the conferences at the statehouse in Des Moines, Iowa. Also present will be Governors of Iowa, Nebraska, Oklahoma and Missouri.

In discussing the drought program at his press conference, the President repeated his previous announcement that the maximum the Farm Credit Administration could loan individuals for winter wheat seed would be raised from $200 to $400—a move designed to aid winter wheat planters. The last esti-

Young Ickes Freed On Drunk Charge

Woburn, Mass., Aug. 25 (AP).—Judge Arthur E. Eno, of Lowell, today acquitted Robert H. Ickes, 22, foster son of Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes, of driving while under the influence of liquor.

Young Ickes, employed on a public works administration project, pleaded innocent to the charge and declared he had one bottle of beer several hours prior to his arrest the night of August 10.

Sergt. Charles Harrold, who arrested Ickes, testified the youth showed no signs of being intoxicated after his car bumped another machine in parking.

Landon Is Told 'Chances Good' In Empire State

G.O.P. Candidate Receives Rousing Welcome at Buffalo.

Gov. Alf M. Landon, Republican nominee for President, will deliver tonight what is expected to be one of the outstanding speeches of the present campaign. His subject will be "Taxes and Government Spending." The speech, which will be delivered in Buffalo, may be heard in Washington at 8 p. m. over Station WMAL.

By Franklyn Waltman,

A Staff Correspondent.

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 25.—Enthusiastically greeted by thousands of western New York Republicans as he arrived here for a two-day visit, and a major campaign speech, Gov. Alf M. Landon today was cheered by reports from party workers that he had better than an even chance to carry the Empire State's 47 electoral votes in his fight for the Presidency.

The Republican nominee was told by various county leaders in a series of conferences which occupied his afternoon that not only was the party unitedly behind him, but that upper New York State rapidly was swinging back to its Republican moorings.

There is general agreement both among Republican leaders and impartial observers, that Gov. Landon will sweep western and northern New York. The question of his victory in the State as a whole depends on the size of that sweep and whether it offsets the vote for President Roosevelt in New York City.

Only one dark cloud appeared on the Landon horizon in western New York State as he entered Buffalo at noon today to the sound of cheering thousands and the raucous blaring of half-a-dozen bands and drum corps.

It was the fight over the Republican gubernatorial nomination. That should be settled amicably and as soon as possible, Republican leaders explained. But Gov. Landon, while ready to listen sympathetically to all aspirants and factions, was determined to keep hands off that situation.

Bleakley, Griffiths and Jaeckle are known as "new Republican leaders" because of their coolness toward the Old Guard leadership. Fearon and Marvin, on the other hand, are affiliated with the Old Guard factions. A sharp fight over the nomination between Old Guard and anti-Old Guard elements within

Burke Quits Democratic Post; Cannot Support All Candidates

By the Associated Press.

Omaha, Nebr., Aug. 25.—U. S. Senator Edward R. Burke of Nebraska handed party leaders and workers of his State a mid-campaign surprise today with the announcement that he had resigned as Democratic National Committeeman for Nebraska.

While they pondered his action and speculated on his possible successor, the Senator, meanwhile was en route to Washington, D. C.

Senator Burke announced his resignation in letters to James A. Farley, Democratic national chairman, and James C. Quigley, of Valentine, Neb., State chairman.

He gave two reasons: saying first, that he did not feel himself able to "bend every effort to bring about the election of all nominees of the party," and second, that he could not give "blanket approval" to all the Roosevelt Administration has done, and felt he must continue to protest against Administration policies which to him seemed wrong.

Burke dictated the letters last night, dropped them in the mail, with copies to newspapers, and left by train for Washington "on business." In his letter to Quigley, he suggested a meeting of the State committee be called immediately to name his successor.

His secretary, Homer Gruenther, said the Senator would go from Washington to Maine to make a speaking tour for the Democratic national committee.

In New York, National Chairman Farley said he had not yet been officially informed of the resignation.

Love Tragedy's Lone Survivor, Woman Back From Death Ride

Mrs. Lillie B. Thomas, 27, Whose Husband Killed Rival and Then Self After 67-Mile Drive, Reported in or Near Washington.

Mrs. Lillie B. Thomas, 27-year-old Washington beauty parlor employe, who lost two loves by murder and suicide in the early hours yesterday, reportedly was staying with friends in or near the city last night, trying to shake off the effects of hysteria which came after a 67-mile death ride down a Virginia highway.

Mrs. Thomas was placed on a Washington-bound train early yesterday at Fredericksburg, Va., by the police, who questioned her for two hours about the death of her husband, Clifton D. Thomas, St. Elizabeths Hospital attendant, and her friend, Gilmer L. Snyder, Washington automobile mechanic.

After Virginia authorities had signed a certificate saying that Snyder was shot by her husband, who later killed himself, Mrs. Thomas failed to return to her Washington apartment at 1430 Belmont street northwest. Friends, however, said she was staying somewhere in or near the city.

According to the Fredericksburg police, Thomas, who had been separated from his wife for more than a year, shot Snyder, his rival, as their small coupe sped along the Washington-Fredericksburg highway near Alexandria. Mrs. Thomas sat in the front seat next to Snyder. Thomas was driving. Authorities said Thomas killed himself at the end of a 67-mile ride.

For many months, friends who knew them both said Thomas had haunted his wife. When she lived in the 2000 block of Sixteenth street northwest, they said, he used to stand for hours in front of her apartment house, nervously puffing cigarettes and waiting for her to come out. They said, too, that Mrs. Thomas, at such times, left by rear fire escapes to avoid seeing him.

Thomas and his wife were childhood sweethearts, it was learned. Mrs. Thomas had been going with Snyder, himself a married man, for only a short while.

Snyder and Mrs. Thomas had gone for a ride last night and returned shortly after midnight to find Thomas pacing the sidewalk in front of her home. A pistol was in his hand. Walking over to their machine, he leveled his gun at Snyder, according to Mrs. Thomas' story to the Virginia police, and said:

"We're going for a little ride."

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 25.—The Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corporation, United States Steel's biggest subsidiary, received today from employe-representatives a demand to recognize the John L. Lewis "one big union" industrial organization plan of collective bargaining.

Five mill workers from the corporation's plants at Chicago and Gary, Ind., recently elected by employe-representation groups declared they found the present collective bargaining plan "utterly futile inasmuch as they are company-dominated."

The five claimed to represent one-half of Carnegie-Illinois' 80,000 wage earners.

George Patterson, head of the committee, said in a statement the workers are demanding a 25 per cent wage increase effective immediately and a universal 40-hour week.

The statement also asked a national wage scale agreement and a wage scale committee "wholly independent and free from the influences and domination of the company," a vacation-with-pay plan that "does away with work injustice from large numbers of men as the 1935 vacation plan does," weekly pay checks for all workers, and "more adequate" safety measures.

It was the first time since the inauguration of Lewis' drive to organize the Nation's half-million steel workers that an employe-representation group has asked the corpora-

Securities Act Called Invasion Of State Rights

Suit Challenging Validity Is Filed in Supreme Court by SEC Opponent.

A new suit challenging validity of the securities act of 1933 as usurpation by the Federal Government of the reserved rights of the States, was filed in the United States Supreme Court here yesterday by J. Edward Jones, New York securities broker.

Jones, who early this year successfully contested the power of the Securities and Exchange Commission to compel him to testify on a proposed security issue he had withdrawn after filing, asked the Supreme Court to review a Second Circuit Court of Appeals decision. The lower court ruling upheld an injunction granted by the Southern New York Federal District Court, restraining Jones from violating the act.

Although Jones was successful in his former Supreme Court suit in maintaining his right to withdraw a registration statement without interference from the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Supreme Court at that time did not pass on the validity of the securities act of 1933.

Assails "Powers."

In his application for a writ of certiorari filed here yesterday, Jones made alleged unconstitutionality of the act his principal plea. He charged the act not only invaded the State field of legislation, but confers upon the Securities and Exchange Commission "inquisitorial powers to investigate at will suspected infractions of the court."

Meanwhile, Federal District Judge John P. Barnes in Chicago yesterday refused to issue an injunction restraining enforcement of the commodity exchange act of 1936, and dismissed a bill of complaint which challenged its constitutionality on 10 counts, according to Associated Press dispatches.

The Chicago suit was brought August 15 by William S. Moore in behalf of himself and all other members of the Chicago Mercantile Exchange. Judge Barnes upheld the contention of the Government that the commodity exchange act was "merely an extension of the provisions of the grain futures act, which already has been held to be constitutional by the United States Supreme Court."

Cites Seizure.

Charging Securities and Exchange Commission agents had seized "armloads" of his books and records and carried them away from his office, under an order "boundless in scope," but contrary to an understanding that his records would be examined only on his premises, Jones recited how two lower courts had rejected his attempt to set aside an injunction obtained by the commission. He said the lower court findings were "probably in conflict with the applicable decisions of this court."

"The questions presented in this case are of grave importance," Jones said in his petition, "because they involve the right of the petitioner and of all other persons who issue, deal in, purchase and sell securities, to employ the facilities of the mails and the instrumentalities of interstate communication in the regular and ordinary conduct of their business activities.

"The questions presented in this case involve the propriety of the regulation by the Federal Government of a business activity heretofore regarded as local in nature and subject to regulation by the respective States under the powers reserved by the people in the tenth amendment to the Constitution."

Significance of Gov. Landon's Chautauqua Speech Emerges in Retrospect.

By Franklyn Waltman

BUFFALO, N. Y., Aug. 25.—The full significance of Gov. Alf M. Landon's denunciation of teachers' oaths and other tactics of the "Red baiters" in his Chautauqua speech are beginning to emerge in retrospect. That address, it develops, contained meaning and implications which far transcend his expressed hostility to the efforts of some of our patriots to put education in this country in a strait-jacket.

WALTMAN.

The Chautauqua speech is somewhat on a level with the telegram Gov. Landon sent to the Cleveland convention, before his nomination, setting forth his own views on three points in the party platform. On that occasion, it was not so much what Gov. Landon said as the straightforward and courageous manner in which he acted that gripped public imagination.

This is true of the Chautauqua speech. For most of us, what Gov. Landon said there was commonplace enough. But that he should have given utterance to those commonplace sentiments—except for the "red baiters" and professional patriots—under the circumstances that he did, made that address significant and notable.

For reasons which will be recited within a moment, Gov. Landon greatly increased his stature as a Presidential candidate by that speech and raised new promise that before the campaign ended he would deal, specifically and fearlessly—and realistically, it might be added—with the major issues before the American people.

Recital of several factors which have been injected into this campaign is necessary to an appreciation of the full significance of that speech. For want of something specific on which to attack the Republican nominee, the Democratic high command has painted him as a sincere, but weak and not overly smart fellow from a "typical prairie State," dominated by all types of unpopular—if not undesirable—elements in the country.

He was portrayed as under the thumb of Publisher William Randolph Hearst and amenable to the latter's will, even though the Kansan in the pre-convention fight for the nomination refused to let the San Simeon publisher use him as a catspaw in the California primary. Yet the Democrats have continued their efforts of seeking to smear Gov. Landon with Hearst, even after his acceptance speech in which he set forth an enlightened attitude on foreign policy which might be termed radical judged by the Hearst standards.

Moreover, the Democrats and their propaganda allies have sought to paint Gov. Landon as a timid little man, dominated by the Republican Old Guard, even if his advisers were keeping the blankets on the latter. The Democrats contended that Gov. Landon's speeches were general because he feared that if he were specific he might tread on someone's toes.

In the Chautauqua speech Gov. Landon exploded all these contentions of his adversaries. If the Kansan were all that the Democrats say he is, then he would have avoided touching on such subjects as teachers' oaths and infringements upon academic freedom as he would the plague.

In the first place, the agitation for legislation subjecting teachers to take oaths to observe faithfulness to their country and its institutions is one of Publisher Hearst's pet hobbies. All of his newspapers have campaigned militantly for such legislation, just as they have supported proposals forbidding reference in public schools to Communism.

This fact was not unknown to Gov. Landon and his advisers when he prepared the Chautauqua speech. Hours before the speech was delivered the assault on the Hearst pet hobby was pointed out on the Landon campaign train by the Governor's aids.

At all events, the Hearst people felt the slap they had received. Their chief editorial writer, who had been in West Middlesex on Saturday and that night had returned to Washington, hastened back to the Landon train after advance copies of the speech had been distributed. He conferred with several of the Landon aids.

And it should not be forgotten that Gov. Landon knew that on the platform at Chautauqua would be Bainbridge Colby, Secretary of State in the Wilson Administration and now an attorney and writer for the Hearst newspapers and a Landon supporter. The references to teachers' oaths left him looking glum.

But those were not the only circumstances which indicated that Gov. Landon cannot be deterred from saying what he wants to say when the spirit moves him. He made the Chautauqua speech several hours after arriving in New York State which, to win in November, he must carry.

The Republican Party in this State—under Old Guard dominance—has been enthusiastic in behalf of teachers' oath legislation as has Publisher Hearst. Such an oath is now required of teachers in this State under legislation known as the Ives act, sponsored by the Republican speaker of the Assembly, Melvin M. Ives, a protege of State Republican Chairman Melvin C. Eaton. Mr. Eaton welcomed Gov. Landon to New York State only a few minutes before the latter spoke.

Incidentally, it might be added that the Ives bill became law through the signature of Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, on whom the New Deal apparently counts to carry the State for President Roosevelt, and so far as could be learned here he has not taken a stand against that type of legislation.

Moreover, other Republican leaders around the country must have been made uncomfortable by Gov. Landon's stand on teachers' oaths. For instance, Gov. Harry W. Nice of Maryland a year ago vetoed such a bill because he held it to be drafted improperly, but he approved of the idea.

Anyone who knows anything about politics knows that it takes courage to express convictions contrary to those held by leaders on whom it is necessary to lean for support. But because Gov. Landon apparently is so imbued with devotion to the democratic process and because he realizes, as he said, that unstified educational institutions are the "bedrock of democracy," he spoke out. It was an omen that on other matters of vital importance he also, in time, will speak out.

J. G. Leatherwood, also of Greenville, was in fourth place.

In the Third District Representative John C. Taylor piled up a crushing lead over J. Wade Drake, Anderson farmer. Returns from 141 of 297 precincts gave Taylor 11,418; Drake, 3,958.

Representative Allard H. Gasque, Florence, held to a substantial majority over two opponents in the Sixth District. With 59 of 237 precincts reported he had 6,242 votes against 4,304 for James R. Turner, Bennettsville, and 495 for Dr. R. G. Blackburn, Marion.

A comfortable margin was rolled up by Representaitve Hampton P. Fulmer in the Second District with 53 of 244 precincts giving him 3,717 votes against 2,131 for Gary Paschal, Columbia attorney.

Two representatives, Thomas S. McMillan in the First District and J. P. Richards in the Fifth, were unopposed in the primary.

Jackson, Miss., Aug. 25 (AP).—Pat Harrison, chairman of the Senate finance committee, held a more than two-to-one lead over his opponent for renomination, former Gov. Sennett Conner, on unofficial State's precincts in today's Democratic primary returns from approximately half the returns from 1,125 precincts of the 1,659 total gave Harrison 103,425 and Conner 48,631 or a majority for Harrison of 54,794.

San Francisco, Aug. 25 (AP).—First returns from Stanislaus County in the Ninth District Congressional primary today gave for Democratic Congressional nomination H. W. Gearhart, Republican incumbent, 81; E. K. Finney, 57. Gearhart had indorsement of the Townsend organization.

mate of the Crop Reporting Board of the Department of Agriculture showed that last year's winter wheat was burned to less than half its average production.

Passing on to a general discussion of the Federal finances, Mr. Roosevelt said the picture was improving month by month, with receipts considerably more than estimated and expenditures less than expected. This was the subject of his Sunday midnight train conference with Secretary of the Treasury Henry L. Morgenthau, jr., and Acting Budget Director Daniel W. Bell en route here from Hyde Park, he said.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull appeared at the White House for a last-minute review of foreign affairs, and other callers included Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes and Horatio Hackett, of the Public Works Administration.

Accompanying the President on the Dustbowl Special were Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace and Works Progress Administrator Harry L. Hopkins. Resettlement Administrator Rexford G. Tugwell, members of the Drought Committee which recently completed a survey of the entire sun-ruined regions, and the other Federal officials concerned will meet the President in the West.

There were no further announcements as to the point at which the President will deliver his speech in the drought area, but indications pointed to a talk from his train at or near the end of his trip which he has insisted will be nonpolitical.

Fraser Predicts Stepping Up of Purchases if Drought Continues.

By the Associated Press.

Heavier Government purchases of drought-distressed cattle unless good fall rains occur were forecast yesterday by William O. Fraser, chairman of the Agriculture Department's drought cattle committee.

Twenty-three counties in five States were added during the day to official drought territory eligible for emergency Federal relief.

Encouraging word came from the Weather Bureau, however, in advance of its regular crop report to be published today. An official there said recent rains had improved corn and forage prospects in northern portions of the Ohio Valley, in the Upper Mississippi Valley, the Great Lakes region and the Northern Great Plains States.

"Precipitation over a vast territory indicates a material improvement in corn and forage crops," said J. B. Kincer, crop expert of the bureau.

Predicts Early Decision.

Fraser, predicting a decision by the end of this week on whether the Government will buy sheep from the drought area, said of the cattle-buying program already under way:

"We are apprehensive that feeders will have used up too much of their reserve forage to winter the large cattle numbers which will pour out of the National forests and mountain country in September and October, and that it will be necessary to step up Government purchases if good fall rains do not occur.

"Total purchases will be only a fraction of the 1934 cattle numbers taken by Federal agencies, but the future buying tempo may approximate on a percentage basis the increase in purchases during the latter part of the 1934 season."

Emphasizing the difference between the 1936 and 1934 cattle situation, Fraser said Government purchases since August 3 to date this year totaled only 3,029, head, compared with 3,779,553 bought by August 25 two years ago.

Thousands in Gems Exhibited at Session

New York, Aug. 25 (AP).—A burglar's dream—hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of jewelry and plateware—lay spread about a Park avenue hotel tonight as the thirty-first convention of the American National Retail Jewelers Association got down to business.

Policemen and private detectives were stationed throughout the exhibit rooms, however, and credentials were required at the doors. With approximately 100 exhibitors displaying their wares, the largest number in the association's history, the sponsors of the affair said they had made no effort to total the value of items on show.

In one small display case alone there was a quarter of a million dollars worth of rare gems, including a 35-carat star ruby, a 60-carat cat's eye, and a 208-carat blue zircon. The latter was claimed by its exhibitor to be the largest and finest stone of its kind ever cut.

Rabbi M. S. Margolies, Pioneer Cleric, Dies

Belmar, N. J., Aug. 25 (AP).—Rabbi Morris S. Margolies, 85, founder and honorary president of the Union of Othodox Rabbis of America and Canada, died here today.

Rabbi Margolies, a native of Lithuania, came to America 47 years ago and served from 1889 to 1906 as rabbi of the Boston (Mass.) Orthodox Community. He had been rabbi of the Kehilath Jeshurun Congregation for 30 years.

The rabbi came here some time ago for the summer, and was taken seriously ill about a week ago. He was the oldest living rabbi in America, having been ordained more than 60 years ago.

Spanish Flier Flees to Evade Anarchists

Lisbon, Portugal, Aug. 25 (AP).—A Spanish government airplane, fully equipped with a machine gun and ammunition, landed near Portalegre tonight, and the pilot, Capt. Jose Fernando Lopes, surrendered to Portuguese authorities.

They said he explained he preferred internment in a neutral country to "the anarchy of the Spanish capital and the horrible crimes of the Marxists."

The Political Arena

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 25.—Democratic State Chairman James C. Quigley, of Nebraska, said today Senator George W. Norris, Progressive Republican, would file for re-election on an independent ticket within the next few days and would have the support of the State's Democratic Senator, Edward R. Burke.

Senator Burke, who was elected Democratic national committeeman last April, resigned from the national committee today.

Burke joined President Roosevelt last spring in urging Senator Norris to seek re-election. In the April primary he supported Quigley for the Democratic senatorial nomination against Terry Carpenter. Carpenter was nominated.

Quigley said he was undecided as to what procedure to follow in the selection of a successor to Burke as national committeeman.

"I probably will just let the matter go until after the election," he added.

New York, Aug. 25 (AP).—James P. Aylward, Democratic national committeeman from Missouri, reported to James A. Farley, national chairman, today on the political situation in his State.

He said he had given the chairman an optimistic report regarding President Roosevelt's chances of carrying Missouri.

Aylward had planned to confer with Thomas Pendergast, Missouri political boss, but was unable to see him because of the latter's illness.

Aylward was accompanied to Farley's office by Senators Harry S. Truman and Bennett Champ Clark, of Missouri.

Another visitor to Farley's office today was L. G. Flannery, Democratic State chairman of Wyoming.

Syracuse, N. Y., Aug. 26 (AP).—William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, called today for the re-election of Gov. Lehman "by a larger majority than was ever given to any Governor" in addressing the annual convention of the State Federation of Labor.

Green at the same time declared that labor's "most pressing need" was for higher wages and the 6-hour-day and urged the delegates to support the Democratic Governor as "the leader in your fight for human rights over property rights."

Topeka, Kans., Aug. 25 (AP).—Kansas Republicans and Democrats reorganized today for the political campaign that leaders of both sides predicted would be a victorious fight.

Gov. Alf M. Landon, Republican Presidential nominee, telegraphed the State Council from Buffalo, N. Y., expressing confidence "that you meeting will reflect the harmony between men and principles which makes secure the victory of the Republican Party in Kansas."

James A. Farley, national chairman, telegraphed the Democratic council:

"We have Landon groggy. Your punch is all that is needed."

Lynn Brodrick, national committeeman, read Farley's message and added:

"We are going to tell Mr. Farley that Kansas is going to deliver that punch."

Landon's message read:

"It is a pleasure to send you my earnest greetings and an expression of my confidence in the sincerity and effectiveness of the work you do today in behalf of the State and the Nation.

"I know your platform will be a calm reflection of your steadfast purposes and that your meeting will reflect the harmony between men and principles which makes secure the victory of the Republican Party in Kansas. I am sorry that I cannot be there to greet you personally and to thank you for all you have done for me in the past."

Straus Quits, Bullitt Named

utes of the break-up of the press conference.

Bullitt has been in this country for two months, with the Moscow Embassy under charge of Loy W. Henderson, second secretary. In this time the ambassador has conferred with the President on several occasions.

Observers here considered the appointment of Bullitt, once known as a "mystery man" because of his quiet underground work for Secretary of State Cordell Hull in London in 1933, an indication of President Roosevelt's growing concern over the state of affairs in Europe.

Represented now in Rome by William Phillips, long considered one of the State Department's finest career diplomats, and in Paris by Bullitt, the United States will be prepared for any delicate eventualities resulting from the Spanish civil war, it is held.

Now 45 years old, Bullit was a world political figure at the age of 27, when as a youthful former newspaperman and peace commission attache, who had been sent by President Woodrow Wilson on a special mission to Russia, he presented in 1919 to the State Department the first memorandum recommending recognition of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics by this country.

On Secret Mission.

In 1932 and 1933, the young Philadelphian, who is of wealthy parentage, set off on a mission of his own to a number of European capitals—a mission that somehow nearly became the subject of a Senate investigation. While in London he held conversations with Maxim Litvinoff and was "seen entering No. 10 Downing street a number of times," according to the then Republican Senator for Indiana, Arthur T. Robinson, who demanded an investigation of his movements.

But Bullitt, author of a novel of Washington intrigue, entitled, "It's Not Done," and a former executive of Famous Players-Lasky, a moving picture corporation, insisted he was not meddling in foreign affairs. A few months later he became a special assistant to the Secretary of State and was sent to Russia in late 1933 as ambassador.

Wed Reed's Widow.

In 1923 Bullitt married Anne Moen Louis Bryant Reed, widow of the famous John Reed, Communist author of "Ten Days That Shook the World." They had one child, Anne.

A graduate of Harvard in 1893, he began as a clerk in the Hanover Bank, and rose rapidly to wealth and eminence through inate business ability. At the time he was chosen Ambassador to France he was a member of the overseers board of Harvard University, a director of the New York Life Insurance Co., the Bowery Savings Bank, L. Union Head Files Suit Against Seattle Times

Seattle, Aug. 25 (AP).—Dave Beck, Pacific Coast representative for the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, today filed a $250,000 damage suit against the Times Printing Co., based on an editorial on the closing of the Post-Intelligencer by the American Newspaper Guild strike.

The editorial, "this shameful page" (in Seattle history) appeared in the Times August 14. The suit asserted the Times intended to charge that Beck ordered the strike, established the picket lines and was responsible for acts of violence.

Landon Asked Reason Kansas Closed Schools

Speech Prompts Professors to Remind Him 458 Were Shut Last Year.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 25.—Republican headquarters today made public statements by five Eastern college presidents commenting favorably on Gov. Alf M. Landon's speech on education, as Democratic headquarters gave out a telegram sent Landon by two professors asking to explain school conditions in Kansas.

The telegram was signed by Dr. Sophonisba Breckinridge, professor of public welfare administration at the University of Chicago, and Dr. Blanche Colton Williams, head of the English department at Hunter College.

"In view of your stated appreciation of the value of education," they asked, "can you explain to us how you could have allowed such conditions to exist in Kansas as are described by your superintendent of schools, W. T. Markham?

"He said that legislation in Kansas has not been favorable to the school program for a number of years. On March 10, of last year, he stated it was a lamentable fact that 458 schools had to be closed, with many teachers going without pay. * * * The conditions in Kansas and the policy of sacrificing education have stirred teachers nationally as well as locally."

The college presidents who commented favorably on the speech, are Clarence A. Barbour, of Brown University; hte Rev. Robert I. Gannon, of Fordham University; Raymond G. Bressler, of Rhode Island State College; the Rev. Louis J. Gallagher, of Boston College, and Guy Winfred Bailey, of the University of Vermont.

Hail and Rain Damage Crops Near Hagerstown

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Aug. 25.—Hail stones the size of walnuts damaged property and crops early tonight in the Dryrun and Fairview sections, ten miles west of here. The accompanying rain, of almost cloudburst proportions, washed roads and gardens in a section north and west of Clear Spring. A number of window panes in the home of Mrs. Joseph Seibert, near Clear Spring, were shattered by the hail.

Apple orchards and corn were badly cut by the hail stones.

France Labors To Match Nazi Army Increases

Strategists Are Convinced Germany Plans War With Russians.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Aug. 25.—French parliamentarians tonight cast about for means of meeting the challenge of the expanded war machine of Germany.

Convicted, they indicated, that Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler was preparing to go to war over the wheat fields of the Russian Ukraine, government Socialists heaved overboard their previous efforts to reduce France's military service period.

Hitler, they said, is going to make war on Russia "under guise of a crusade against the red peril."

The Nazi chancellor, in extending the German compulsory military training period from one to two years, thus swelling the ranks of those under arms or in training to 1,000,000 men, cited "bolshevist perils" as motivating the German action.

Tonight France's leaders apprehensively faced the problem of matching the new man power of the German army, expressing fears that Germany would crush France's fighting forces if it came to a showdown under the existing comparative sizes of the two nations' armies.

France Has But 605,000.

French officials listed their nation's fighting forces at but 605,000, compared with the Reich's reported goal of 1,000,000 men by October.

As French officialdom pondered the developments, Fernand Laurent, member of the Chamber of Deputies' army committee, asked Chairman Guy La Chambre to call an emergency meeting to discuss means of strengthening the French forces.

Although tonight the attention of the French government was directed across the Rhineland almost to the exclusion of all else, the Spanish neutrality agreement was declared to be virtually in effect after the Reich's decision yesterday to place an embargo on arms shipments to Spain.

Army to Total 1,182,000.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, Aug. 25.—Nazi Germany will have 1,182,000 men living in military barracks by October 1.

This figure was the latest total tonight of the men to be conscripted for compulsory training under a series of decrees promulgated yesterday and today by Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler.

Under the decrees:

The manpower of the army, navy and air force will be increased to between 700,000 and 800,000 under extension of compulsory military training periods from one to two years.

One hundred eighty-two thousand youths will begin six months of "labor service," a preparatory schooling for actual army service.

Hitler's picked storm troops will number 200,000.

As the Reich counted its increased manpower available in time of war, newspapers in Berlin continued their anti-Russian campaigns. One newspaper quoted the red army's war strength at 9,000,000.

London, Aug. 25 (AP).—Greta Britain tonight movedw to enlist other powers in a joint appeal to end the reported "atrocities" in the Spanish civil war—such as the alleged massacre of hostages and killing of civilians.

Italy Now Neutral.

Rome, Aug. 25 (AP).—Italy, a press ministry spokesman said tonight, already considers herself bound to neutrality in the Spanish civil war.

Formal signing of the agreement is planned, but has not yet been carried out, the spokesman said. The Italian point of view, he said, was that all that was required was to continue to refuse approval of arms exports to Spain.

The moment that Italy finds out that any of the other powers has violated the pact, the spokesman continued, Italy will consider it automatically ended.

Ireland Applies Embargo.

Dublin, Aug. 25 (U.P.).—The government informed France tonight that the Irish Free State was applying an arms embargo against both rebels and loyalists in Spain.

Premier Demands Pact.

Madrid, Aug. 25 (AP).—Spain's premier, Jose Giral Pereira, tonight said the Spanish government had demanded a European neutrality pact be signed as quickly as possible "to prevent our enemies from profiting by delay."

Festival Program To Go on Tonight

The eleventh summer festival program, scheduled for last evening at the National Sylvan Theater, was canceled because of inclement weather.

The entire program—a concert by the Washington Civic Orchestra, the Theater Group of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, in their prize-winning interpretation of Kenneth Sawyer Goodman's "The Game of Chess," and the Estelle Wentworth Opera group in Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana"—will be offered this evening at 7:45 o'clock.

Tickets, or their stubs, from last evening's postponement will be honored this evening, or at any subsequent festival.

The bodies of the Moors, it was learned, were cremated on the field of action after being covered with gasoline-drenched brush.

The government tonigh threw a heavy guard around Getafe Airdrome, outside Madrid, bombed by rebel airplanes Sunday. These bombs, Premier Jose Giral Pereira said today, he was convinced had been made in Europe outside Spain.

The government adherents, meanwhile, carried out a new purge of Fascist rebel sympathizers in their midst, arresting, among others, the aged Father Jose Fernandez Montana, onetime confessor to the royal family of Spain.

In swift reprisal for the fire and attempted rebellion in the loyalist capital's prison Saturday, government firing squads today put to death four rebel officers condemned by the new tribunal, which contained 14 civilians representing various factions of the loyalist Popular Front.

for arms, imprisoned two aged priests, one of whom died from the treatment he was subjected to.

Communists also partly destroyed a brothers' home at Premio De Mar, and burned to the ground a church containing the remains of the famous writer, Fratel Miguel.

Observatore said Reds had not spared a single school belonging to brothers throughout Spain. They also forced students, priests and superiors in the town of Cambrils to board a ship, and no news has been received from them since. Two chaplains were executed there, while the director of the institute died of heart disease and from shock.

Earlier, the Vatican confirmed reports that the Bishops of Jaen, Lerida, Segovia, Siguenza and Barbastro dioceses had been killed.

The Bishop of Barbastro was shot by Communists, but before dying he consigned his pectoral cross to a woman, whom he charged to deliver it to the Pope. The Bishop of Siguenza was burned alive.

Anxiety was felt for the Bishop of Barcelona, who has disappeared. The Bishops of Madrid and Toledo were reported to be safe, the former having been vacationing in the north at the outbreak of the revolt and the latter visiting another bishopric.

Vatican officials said their information was obtained from refugees being harbored in the Spanish college here.

Mgr. Juan Perello and Bishop Vich, of Tarragona, arrived in Rome tonight, having fled from Spain through France wearing civilian clothes.

the party might conceivably take place.

The selection of a Republican candidate for Governor in New York will have a direct bearing on the outcome of the Presidential race, since Gov. Landon must carry this State to win. That importance was well demonstrated by the extreme efforts to which President Roosevelt went to persuade Democratic Gov. Herbert H. Lehmann to seek re-election.

Lehmann concededly will be a difficult man to beat. He is much stronger than President Roosevelt in the State. Whoever the Republicans nominate for Governor, on the other hand, will be a weaker man than Gov. Landon. If he is elected he will get through on the Landon coat tails, it is agreed. The important factor from the national ticket's viewpoint is to get a gubernatorial candidate who will not pull backward too hard on the Landon coat tails and deprive the latter of votes.

Among those who conferred with Gov. Landon today was Theodore Roosevelt, jr., who pronounced the Kansan "the truest kind of liberal," and the "best type of clear-thinking, hard-hitting American." The son of old "T. R." whom Landon followed into the Bull Moose movement, said he was amazed to see President Roosevelt "posing as the logical legatee of the progressive policies of 1912 when I recall that he consistently opposed my father in those years."

Aside from brief expressions of appreciation for the warm reception given to him at various times during the day, Gov. Landon's only public remarks were addressed to a delegation representing the People's Mandate to End of War, which called on him to enlist his support in that cause.

Meets War Foes.

"I realize that war is the greatest threat to freedom and democracy," Gov. Landon told the group after listening to their addresses. "I think I have made clear how I feel on this subject in meeting in Topeka your representatives. I am happy to know that your numbers are increasing."

Gov. Landon's special arrived in Buffalo shortly before noon, making the trip from Westfield, N. Y., where it was sidetracked during the night, without stops. Westfield is the railroad station for Chautauqua, where Gov. Landon spoke last night.

He was greeted in his private car by a group of Republican leaders. Meanwhile, outside the New York Central Station a large crowd waited impatiently to see the Republican nominee. As he appeared three female fife and drum corps—American Legion auxiliaries—heralded his arrival and several thousand persons broke into cheers.

The Kansan was escorted through the main business section of the city on the way to the headquarters hotel, slowly traversing streets lined several deep with spectators who applauded, whistled and yelled "Hey, Alf!" as he passed. Midway to the hotel, the procession halted while a huge canvas banner was hoisted across the thoroughfare and an address of welcome was made to Gov. Landon by Charles T. Yeager.

Police had to push a path for Gov. Landon to enter the hotel, where several thousand persons tightly packed inside and around the entrance cheered him.

His first engagement was as guest of honor at a luncheon attended by the delegates and alternates to the Cleveland convention from Erie and Niagara counties. These delegates were the first from New York to announce in advance of the convention that they would support Gov. Landon.

The round of conferences with party leaders followed the luncheon. Gov. Landon, late in the day, was the guest at a tea of several thousand Republican women from this part of New York. The tea also was attended by Mrs. Ruth Pratt, New York Republican national committeewoman, Mrs. Robert L. Bacon, vice chairman of the State Republican committee, and Miss Natalie Couth, director of the eastern women's division of the Republican National Committee. They came here for the Landon speech tomorrow.

Later, Gov. Landon went to the home of Robert H. Butler, publisher of the Buffalo Evening Press, to be the guest of honor at a dinner party of Buffalo notables. He spent the night at the Butler home.

Tomorrow has been designated as "Landon Day in Buffalo." Gov. Landon will continue conferences with Republican leaders, including National Committeeman Charles D. Hilles and former Secretary of the Treasury Ogden L. Mills, due to arrive here tomorrow morning.

Gov. Landon will attend a Republican county committee dinner of several thousand persons, to be held in the 106th Field Artillery Armory tomorrow evening, subsequently leading a mammoth parade through Buffalo to Offerman Stadium, where 30,000 persons are expected to gather to hear him speak. He has chosen Federal finances for his topic and is expected to strike harder at the New Deal than he has previously.

Soviet Press Asks Continued Purges

Moscow, Aug. 25 (AP).—Soviet newspapers tonight demanded continued purges of counter-revolutionaries as they praised the state for putting to death 16 conspirators condemned for ploting to overthrow the Soviet regime at the behest of the exiled Leon Trotzky.

(At Hoenefoss, Norway, Trotzky said he felt it his duty to "avenge" the deaths of the conspirators who had accused him of plotting personally a wave of terror by which they said he hoped to return to power in Russia. He termed the executions of the men who accused him of hacthing a plot to overthrow Soviet regime "one of history's greatest crimes.")

U. S. Protests Polish Arrests Of Americans

Vigorous Representations on Money Law Jailings Bring Releases.

By the Associated Press.

Arrests of Americans in Poland for alleged currency restriction violations have impelled the State Department to make several vigorous representations to the Polish government during the last month.

It was learned authoritatively yesterday that many United States nationals had been subjected to detention in Poland during that period, the latest of whom was Mrs. Dorothy Atkinson, of Minneapolis, whose release has just been ordered as a result of American diplomatic action.

Thus far, it was said, this Government had been successful in obtaining the release of all save Mrs. Minnie Galewski, of New York, whose daughter informed the State Department yesterday that she had been held in prison at a Polish border city for five weeks and still was being detained in the town awaiting trial.

The unconditional release of Mrs. Sonia Nordegg, American wife of a Canadian citizen, who was arrested and imprisoned at Rawicz, Poland, on August 17, also was announced by the department yesterday. She is the wife of Martin Nordegg, of Ottawa, Canada.

As a result of strong representations by American consular authorities, Mrs. Nordegg was released on August 18, but her passport was withheld. She was refused permission, however, to leave Poland pending trial on a charge of technical violation of exchange regulations. Later, the charge against her was quashed and her passport, with permission to leave Poland, was handed to the American consulate general at Warsaw today.

Mrs. Atkinson Departs.

Warsaw, Poland, Aug. 25 (AP).—Jailers at Ostrow, Poland, said tonight Mrs. Frederick Atkinson, of Minneapolis, Minn., had been released unconditionally from charges of currency irregularity.

With her son and daughter, Mrs. Atkinson left immediately for Krakow.

Mrs. Atkinson said she had declined to eat food provided by the jail during her two days of imprisonment and had lived on chocolate.

Can Speak Only English.

New York, Aug. 25 (AP).—Friends of Mrs. Minnie Galewski, reported by her daughter, Yetta, to be held a prisoner in Poland for alleged violation of the currency laws, said she was able to speak only English.

Mrs. Galeswski, they said, was born about 50 years ago in Cerrantzi, Rumania, but has lived in the United States, of which she is a citizen, more than 30 years and has forgotten her native tongue.

The daughter informed the State Department her mother was arrested at Sniatyn, Poland, on the border of Rumania, as she was trying to reach her birthplace, Cerrantzi.

AMERICAN HOMEOWNERS SAVE THOUSANDS OF DOLLARS EVERY YEAR

MORE HEAT FROM LESS FUEL

NO-MONEY-DOWN PLAN BRINGS CRANE COMFORT AND ECONOMY WITHIN EASY REACH OF EVERYONE

Take an ordinary match and light it. Place the palm of your hand beside the flame. It's warm.
Now place the palm of your hand over the flame. It's hot.
Both times it's the same match . . . the same amount of fire. But there's a big difference in the amount of heat you feel.

That explains the secret of Crane comfort and economy. Crane boilers have about 50% more heat-absorbing surface directly over the heating gases than the average boiler. Further, patented baffles direct the water over the hottest part of the boiler.
In that way more heat is taken from a given amount of fuel and carried to the rooms of your home.
That's why it takes less fuel and costs less money to heat your home with a Crane boiler.

"We wish to thank you for selling us on putting in our new Crane Boiler. We really have saved money by doing it. It's easy to run, seems to hold the fire longer, and we don't burn as much fuel as we used to."
H. C. WEIGOLD, Mt. Lebanon, Pa.

FREE Estimate
Ask any responsible heating contractor for complete information . . . absolutely without obligation . . . on how you can enjoy Crane comfort and save real money on fuel. Your contractor will make a survey and give a free estimate upon request.

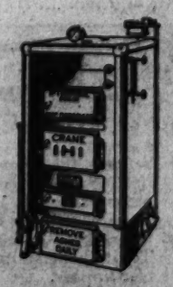
MUST COST YOU A PILE OF MONEY TO KEEP YOUR HOUSE SO WARM. I'M RIGHT NEXT DOOR AND WE CAN'T GET ENOUGH HEAT
WE HAD THAT TROUBLE TOO, UNTIL WE PUT IN A CRANE BOILER. NOW WE GET TWICE THE HEAT AND SAVE FUEL TOO!

DO YOUR HEATING DOLLARS GO UP IN SMOKE?

There's lots of heat in the fuel you buy. But whether it is carried to the rooms in your home or wasted on the way depends upon the heating system.



And as long as you're paying for the heat why not get plenty of it?

In fact you'll probably save enough on your fuel bills to pay for a new Crane Boiler and have some left. It happens all the time, Crane owners tell us!

EASY TERMS—NO MONEY DOWN
The Crane Finance Plan . . . no money down and three years to pay, government rates . . . applies not only to a new Crane Boiler but to an entire new Crane Heating System.
Look into it now. Bring Crane comfort and economy into your home and watch your boiler pay for itself.

Roosevelt Bows To Ickes Appeal On Relief Fund

Part of $300,000,000 Is Assured for 'Useful' Building Projects.

At least partial disbursements from the $300,000,000 PWA relief fund for construction of "useful" projects was assured yesterday, when the President made minor concessions to Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes modifying his original position for PWA grants based on 100 per cent use of relief labor. The announcement was made by the President, following a two-hour conference with Ickes, the second such interview in two days.

The concession, which affects only communities which held municipal elections, to provide their 55 per cent of the cost of a project, would involve less than $100,000,000 out of the $300,000,000 available, PWA spokesmen said.

The President said he felt there was a moral obligation to carry through such projects, on the 45 per cent grant basis, regardless of the relief labor available.

Stands by Requirement.

But with regard to the rest of the $300,000,000 PWA money available, the President indicated he was standing by his original requirement that it be allotted only to municipalities that could take enough people off relief rolls to take up substantially the full amount of the PWA grant allotted for a project. Ickes recently stated that on this basis, grants would average only about 10 per cent of the total cost.

The President insisted yesterday there was a misapprehension in regard to this, pointing out that while in a steel bridge and other such projects, most of the money went for materials, projects would be favored using a larger percentage of labor. He disclosed that between $3,000,000 and $5,000,000 had been allotted this week to projects meeting his relief rule.

All projects will be checked to see if they meet the two principles laid down, the President said. Meanwhile a check-up of the occupational classifications of workers now under WPA will be made, under a $1,500,000 allocation the President said he had made to the United States Employment Service for this purpose.

Classifications Incorrect.

The President said occupational classifications of WPA rolls had been found to be incorrect in some individual cases. Some of the records are two years old, and the men in many cases are much more skilled in certain trades than they were, he said.

Secretary Ickes cancelled a press conference scheduled for yesterday, and did not disclose whether the revised basis of making PWA allotments was satisfactory to him. He had viewed the President's prior arrangement as virtually blocking any extensive use of the $300,000,000.

Police Guard Widow After Extortion Threat

Springfield, Mass., Aug. 25 (AP).—Establishment of a heavy guard around the home of Mrs. Ida Young Denault, one of the city's wealthiest women, revealed tonight an attempt to extort $5,000 from her under threat of death.

Paul P. Stephenson, nephew of Mrs. Denault and police commissioner of Springfield, told of the plot.

Mrs. Denault, a widow, controls a huge patent medicine fortune. Her home embraces 40 acres in the Longmeadow section.

Stephenson said a man "who spoke with a foreign accent" tried unsuccessfully to speak with Mrs. Denault on the telephone. This attempt was followed by three letters demanding the money.

Black Legion's Leader Hunted by Ohio Police

6 Damage Suits Ask $230,000 From Bus Firm

Widow of Passenger Killed in Virginia Accident Seeks $10,000.

Six suits against the Atlantic Greyhound Lines, Inc., asking a total of $230,000, were filed in the District Court yesterday as a result of an accident last June at Natural Bridge, Va., in which several persons lost their lives.

Chief among the complainants was Mrs. Hannah E. Keesee, widow of John L. Keesee, who is said to have incurred fatal injuries when the bus, in which he was a passenger, left the road and overturned. She asks $10,000 for his death.

Others who sought damages were Joseph Berman, of New York City, and members of his family. Mrs. Annette Berman, and her two sons, Allen and Philip Robert Berman, were hurt in the crash. Mrs. Berman asks damages of $100,000; Philip seeks an award of $50,000, and Allen seeks damages of $10,000 for injuries he received when he was burned. Berman asked damages of $50,000 because of injuries to his wife, and $10,000 because of his son's injuries. The suits, filed by Attorney Samuel Bogorad, insisted excessive speeding by the bus was a factor in the accident.

In another suit yesterday, Mrs. Mamie L. Murphy, administratix of the estate of James I. Murphy, 5014 Illinois avenue northwest, sought damages of $10,000 from the Chestnut Farms-Chevy Chase Dairy, Inc., because of the death of her husband, who, she said suffered fatal injuries when a company truck collided with her husband's automobile at South Dakota and Rhode Island avenues northeast, last September.

Mother Seeks 'Do as I Please' Girl's Freedom

Turns to Illinois After Indiana Balks Effort to Annul Nuptials.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Aug. 25.—Mary Belle Spencer, attorney, turned to Illinois courts tonight after Indiana law balked her first attempt to annul the runaway marriage of her 16-year-old "do as she pleases" daughter to young J. Edward Wright, 21.

"I am determined to save Mary Belle's happiness," said the mother, "and I expect to have a bill of annulment ready for filing in the Cook County (Chicago) Circuit Court some time tomorrow."

She declined to discuss all details of her plans following her return from La Porte, Ind.

There she was told by Circuit Judge Wirt Worden that he doubted she could do anything under Indiana law to dissolve the marriage performed there last Thursday by a Justice of the Peace.

"Indiana statutes disempower a clerk from issuing a license if the information on which it is to be based is untrue," she said. "I believe I can prove that some of the data supplied by Mr. Wright was not accurate."

Mrs. Spencer's attorney explained the change of heart shown by his client who had expressed pleasure over the marriage when he quoted her as saying:

"Yesterday I called on his parents. I found them, ah, well, not precisely cordial. Then, too, the boy's father seemed to be concerned about the matter of his son's supporting a wife. So, her father (Dr. Richard V. Spencer) and I decided that for this once Mary Belle had a mistake in doing as she darned well pleased."

Private Yards Get Contracts For 9 Warships

Four Firms to Participate in Program; U. S. Will Construct Six.

Contracts for the Navy's 1936 building program in private yards were awarded yesterday by Admiral William H. Standley, acting Secretary of the Navy. At the same time, construction of six vessels in Government-owned navy yards was announced.

The following private firms were awarded contracts: Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co., Newport News, Va., two 1,500-ton torpedo boat destroyers at $4,125,000 each, subject to adjustments for changes in the cost of direct labor and material.

The Federal Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co., Kearny, N. J., two 1,500-ton torpedo boat destroyers at $4,267,000 each, subject to adjustments for changes in the cost of direct labor and material.

The Bath Iron Works Corporation, Bath, Me., two 1,500-ton torpedo boat destroyers at $4,343,150 each, subject to adjustments for changes in the cost of direct labor and material.

The Electric Boat Co., Groton, Conn., three submarines at $2,734,000 each, subject to adjustments for changes in the cost of direct labor and material.

Prices for destroyers are about 6 per cent higher than last year, while submarine prices are 9 per cent higher, Standley said.

Government-owned navy yards will build the following vessels: Portsmouth Yard, Portsmouth, N. H., two submarines; Boston Navy Yard, two destroyers; Norfolk Navy Yard, one destroyer, and the Charleston (S. C.) Yard, one destroyer.

Allocation of the remaining vessels of the 1936 program—two destroyers and one submarine—will not be made until decisions are reached on building a new drydock at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, and on the construction of a battleship at an Eastern navy yard, Standley said.

Japanese Land Grant Annuled by Brazil

Rio de Janeiro, Aug. 25 (AP).—The Brazilian Senate, it was learned today, has annuled a 2,410,000-acre Japanese land grant in the state of Amazonas.

The action was taken in secret session yesterday. The Senate voted unanimously after hearing a report in which the army general staff assailed the land grant as unpatriotic and anti-nationalist.

Two Japanese Killed in China; Tension Is High

Protests Reported Likely; Britons Allegedly Fired Upon.

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai, Aug. 25.—The killing of two Japanese and wounding of two others in Chengtu, Szechuen, assumed tonight the proportions of a new international incident as Japanese officials prepared to lodge "vigorous representations" with the Chinese government.

Szechuen authorities notified the Chinese national government of the affair, although details of the reported attack were lacking.

Yakichiro Suma, Japanese consul general in Shanghai, said "vigorous representations will be made to the national government if it is found the Szechuen authorities were lax in protecting Japanese visitors."

(From Peiping came word that three British sailors had been fired upon as they returned to their barracks after a moving picture show. One soldier was wounded in the leg.

(Apprehension was heightened when it was rumored the attack was instigated by Japanese seeking to avenge the slaying of Japanese soldiers May 26. British soldiers were accused of the May 26 attack by Japanese officials, but were freed by a British consular court after a trial.)

Britain and Egypt To Sign Suez Pact

London, Aug. 25 (AP).—Great Britain and Egypt will sign a treaty tomorrow which is expected to unravel several knotty problems along the "line of empire."

Although the full terms of the friendship and alliance pact will not be disclosed for several days, it was known the formula assures the safety of the Suez Canal to Britain and respects Egyptian claims to sovereignty.

British troops, it was understood, will evacuate Cairo where they have been stationed for more than half century to be quartered on the banks of the Suez Canal when barracks there are ready. The British Military air base and depot at Alexandria, however, will be maintained and strengthened.

The strength of the Egyptian air force will be raised and British military instructors will transform the Egyptian army—now little more than a glorified police force—into a strong, mobile and well-equipped militia.

15,000 Are Expected At Transit Co. Outing

More than 15,000 employes of the Capital Transit Co. will celebrate at the annual company outing and party at Glen Echo tomorrow. The program includes a picnic, sports contest, vaudeville, swimming and dancing.

Festivities will be opened at 1:45 p. m. with a Punch and Judy show. At 4 p. m. the River Bend Indians will present a war dance and tribal show. Dave McWilliams' orchestra will furnish the music for dancing in the Spanish ballroom from 3 to 6 p. m. Sports events will be begun at 2 p. m. Edward S. Pardoe heads the committee which made arrangements for the party.

Good Friday Murders Are Charged to Miner

The Hanover township miner is charged with the deaths of Thomas Maloney, former mine union leader; his young son, Thomas, and Michael Gallagher, school director and cemetery sexton.

Bombs wrapped as Easter gifts were sent to six persons in this anthracite area last Good Friday. Two of the boxes were opened and exploded in the hands of their recipients.

Ruth Chatterton Flies To Sportsmen's Derby

Los Angeles, Aug. 25 (AP).—Ruth Chatterton, film actress, and three other women fliers left in their planes today for Cleveland in preparation for the sportsmen pilots' derby in connection with the national air races, the management announced.

The derby will start from Cleveland Saturday and end at San Diego, Calif., September 3, the day before the national air races open here for four days.

Two Firemen Die, One Hurt In Auto Crash

Car Misses Curve on Road Near Alexandria, Turns Over Four Times.

Two volunteer firemen were killed late yesterday when their automobile missed a curve and turned over four times on Telegraph road. A companion was injured seriously.

The dead are Harry Lipscomb, 20, of the 200 block of North Fairfax street, Alexandria, and William Jenkins, 23, of near Franconia, Va.

The injured man is S. Guy Duncan, 27, of 916 Prince street, Alexandria, a brother of William Duncan, chief of the Alexandria Fire Department. At the Alexandria Hospital it was said he was expected to recover.

Lipscomb, a volunteer in the Alexandria Engine Company No. 4, was the son of Harry Lipscomb, who perished when the liner Morro Castle burned off the New Jersey coast. Jenkins was a member of the Franconia Fire Department.

The three men were on their way to Alexandria from Franconia. Farmers 3 miles below Alexandria said they noticed their coupe speeding on Telegraph road, and a moment later heard a screeching of brakes and a crash.

Both Lipscomb and Jenkins were thrown from the car.

Lipscomb was employed at a King street gasoline station, Alexandria. His brother Whitfield was killed in September, 1930, when a member of the Alexandria Fire Department. He was killed when a fire engine turned over on River Road at Four-Mile-Run.

Riff Leader's Escape Denied by French

Paris, Aug. 25 (AP).—Widely published reports that Abd-El-Krim, one-time Riff leader of a Moroccan revolt, had escaped from exile caused a sensation in Paris today, but the minister of colonies, after an investigation, declared Krim had not fled from the Isle of Reunion.

The Moroccan chieftain has lived in exile on Reunion in the Indian Ocean since his defeat by the French in his attempt to found an independent republic in North Africa.

Townsend Foe 'Liar' Epithet Arouses Judge

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Aug. 25.—A threat by the judge to "throw" rival lawyers "out of court bodily" when one cried "Liar!" concluded today a hearing in which Dr. Francis E. Townsend described the financial operations of his Old Age Revolving Pensions, Ltd.

Dr. Townsend had testified the pension movement "would go to pieces overnight" without his leadership, when Attorney Charles H. Hubbell arose and pointed to Ben F. Sacharow, attorney for the Rev. Alfred J. Wright, ousted Townsend director, in a $1,000,000 accounting suit against the organization.

"A paper he submitted here last night was stolen from our files," said Hubbell, representing Townsend interests, "by Robert E. Clements (former national secretary of the Townsend organization). It proves he (Sacharow) is in Clements' employ. He called me a liar yesterday——"

Sacharow leaped to his feet.

"I'll call you a contemptible liar again," he shouted, "and a peddler of perjury."

"Stop it, both of you," ordered Common Pleas Judge George Kerr, "or I'll throw you out of court bodily. I mean it."

That ended the incident.

Portes Gil Succeeded As Mexico Party Chief

Mexico City, Aug. 25 (AP).—Silvano Barba Gonzalez, secretary of interior, succeeded Emilio Portes Gil tonight as president of the National Revolutionary (Government) Party. A special session of the party's executive committee, after conferring with President Lazaro Cardenas, accepted Portes Gil's "irrevocable" resignation and selected his youthful successor.

Hughes, Stone Are Appointed Major Generals

Six Colonels Are Named Brigadier Generals; All Fill Vacancies

The appointment of Brig. Gen. John H. Hughes, assistant chief of staff at the War Department, and of Brig. Gen. David L. Stone to be major general was announced last night by President Roosevelt.

At the same time the President announced the appointment of six new brigadier generals, including Col. George P. Tyner and Col. Walter Krueger, both of whom are now attached to the War Department general staff here.

The others appointed brigadiers are Col. William H. Wilson, of the Coast Artillery Corps, stationed at Boston, Mass.; Col. Robert McC. Beck, jr., of the Cavalry, stationed at Fort Meade, S. Dak.; Col. Asa L. Singleton, of the Infantry, stationed at Fort Benning, Ga., and Col. George C. Marshall, of the Infantry, stationed at Chicago, Ill.

All the appointments made to fill vacancies occasioned by retirement will be effective October 1. Gen. Hughes succeeds Maj. Gen. Frank Parker; Gen. Stone succeeds Maj. Gen. Frank C. Bolles.

Gen. Hughes, who has served here since 1933 as assistant chief of staff in charge of operations and training, is a native of New York City and a member of the West Point class of 1897. He was cited for gallantry in action in the war with Spain and afterward served during the Philippine insurrection and in the World War.

Gen. Stone, a native of Stoneville, Miss., graduated from the Military Academy in 1898. He served throughout the Santiago Campaign during the Spanish War and then went with his regiment to the Philippines, where he was severely wounded while fighting the insurgents. During the World War he saw action at Chateau-Thierry, the Argonne-Mount Faucon Forest, and the St. Mihiel Salient. He has been in command of Fort Snelling since 1933.

Col. Tyner has been on duty in Washington since July 1 of this year. He is a native of Davenport, Iowa, and entered the service as a captain of the First Illinois Cavalry during the War with Spain. He later served during the Philippine Insurrection and then entered the Regular Army as a second lieutenant of cavalry.

Voters of Tennessee Are Advised on Ballot

The National Capital Republican Club yesterday advised Tennessee voters that the deadline on poll taxes assessed against them is September 3. Federal employes, however, are given an additional month, making October 3 the last day upon which the poll assessment may be paid.

Absentee voters who have qualified may register by mail until October 13, and the club will notarize the forms free of charge from 8:30 a. m. to 9 p. m., at headquarters, Sixteenth street at Scott circle. Registration cannot be effected until the poll tax has been paid, but voters more than 50 years of age are not required to pay the tax.

Odd Tombstone Inscriptions Revealed in Old Graveyard

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Bristol, Va., Aug. 25.—Of many tombstone inscriptions copied recently by a group of young people cleaning Sullivan County (Tenn.) graveyards as a National Youth Administration project, the strangest of all is in Pleasant Hill Cemetery, Between Blountsville and Holston Institute, about 10 miles southwest of Bristol.

During the last few years, since the burial of Mrs. Fannie Ben Pierson, visitors from far and wide have read her odd biography, which she had placed upon her gravestone before her death.

"Fannie Ben, left by Dr. J. J. Ensor, March 10, 1857, with Ben & Katie Wine, weight 4 lbs.; no finger nor toe nails. With a gold eye tooth, nursed on a pillow for nine weeks. Afflicted with St. Vitus' dance four years. Knee out of joint three times, broken leg and dog bite. A scholar, talented musician, studied medicine, a nurse for 50 years. Married twice, no children, a member of the Quaker church since 1876. An intelligent, accomplished woman, admired by all."

In addition to making certain that prosperity would know her life ailments and outstanding characteristics, she left a mute warning to all who would pass her grave. On the front stone, beneath the name and date of birth, are the following lines:

"Remember friends, as you pass by,
As you are now, so once was I,
As I am now, you too shall be,
Prepare for death and follow me."

Two pictures of Mrs. Pierson incased in glass also adorn the gravestone.

It evidently was a strong desire in the family to leave life histories at burial places. The following inscription is over the nearby grave of a sister of the same woman:

"A truthful child, mild tempered, quiet disposition, near-sighted, strong mind. She grew a great favorite, speaking evil of none, fine in art and penmanship, a sweet singer."

More than 100 rural cemeteries already have been beautified by a staff of 15 young people, nine girls and six boys between the ages of 18 and 25. They clean the grounds, fill in sunken graves, replace fallen fences, set headstones in place and tabulate all information found on markers.

Norfolk to Observe 200th Anniversary

Norfolk, Va., Aug. 25.—Norfolk will begin the celebration of its 200th birthday here on September 15 and continue the ceremonies through October 6, according to a program just announced by F. E. Turin, chairman of the bi-centennial committee. Congress has authorized a medal to commemorate the occasion.

The program begins with a meeting of the city council, with brief ceremonies including the presentation of the historic mace, given the city in 1753 by Gov. Dinwiddie, and the only city mace in the country. An aviation demonstration by squadrons of ships from the naval operating base and Langley Field, general headquarters of the United States Army Air Corps, will feature the day's ceremonies.

On October 3 the dedication of Norfolk's new stadium at William and Mary College grounds, Norfolk branch, followed by a football game between William and Mary and the University of Virginia is scheduled. On October 4 special services in all the churches are planned. October 5 will see a colorful parade, followed on October 6 by a pageant at William and Mary stadium.

Teacher, Killed in Car, Buried in Grantsville

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Grantsville, Md., Aug. 25.—Funeral services were held this afternoon with burial in Grantsville Cemetery for B. Olin Kesner, 27, an elementary teacher in the Grantsville school, who was crushed to death near here when he was returning with three companions from a Woodmen of the World celebration at Oakland. The car upset.

Mr. Kesner, a native of Harrisonsburg, Va., is survived by his widow and two small children. He graduated from Frostburg State Teachers College and from Shenandoah College, Dayton, Va.

Lutheran Women Open 3-Day Session

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., Aug. 25.—Delegates from approximately 150 organizations throughout the Lutheran Synod of Virginia are expected to gather at Grace Lutheran Church, here for the three-day convention of the Women's Missionary Society, which will open tomorrow. It will be the fifey-third annual session.

Registration of the delegates will be followed by a communion service to be conducted by the Rev. J. P. Derrick, of Woodstock, Va., and the Rev. C. Worthington Lowe, of Winchester. The Rev. R. H. Anderson, D. D., superintendent of the Synod of Virginia, will deliver the sermon.

Sister Catherine Neuhardt, deaconess, of Hagerstown, Md., will conduct devotional periods during the convention. Mrs. Ivor Melton, of Shenandoah, Va., will have charge of the young women's work and Mrs. M. J. Klutz, of Damascus, Va., will present the Light Brigade program.

Business sessions, reports of officers, election of officers and election of delegates to the triennial convention of the Women's Missionary Society of the United Lutheran Church at Buffalo, N. Y., in 1937, will occupy the days of the convention.

The convention dinner will be held Thursday evening in the social room of the church.

Tear Gas Routs Strikers, Opens Path to Plant

Police Hurl Bombs at Tire Factory in Cumberland; Escort Workers.

By the Associated Press.

Cumberland, Md., Aug. 25.—Police officers tossed tear gas bombs among strike pickets and sympathizers at the Kelly-Springfield Tire Co.'s plant today to clear the way for a truckload of workers entering the plant.

The pickets and their friends gathered around the truck at the plant entrance, apparently in an effort to prevent the workers from going to their jobs. No resistance was offered after the tear gas was spread and the truck proceeded with the workers.

It left the plant at a high rate of speed, carrying the men whom the workmen had relieved.

The brush between the officers patrolling the plant and the strikers did not appear to be a serious one. No personal encounters or arrests were reported.

Police officials later communicated with Washington police requesting additional supplies of tear gas, but were informed Capital police could spare none of their supply.

In the meantime a conference was in progress between striger representatives and plant officials in an effort to end the strike. John Geis is president of the Rubber Workers Local, sponsor of the strike, and Efund S. Burke is president of the tire plant.

Love Tragedy

machine, grabbed the steering wheel. Mrs. Thomas told the police, and sped through downtown Washington, on down the Fredericksburg highway.

All the time, Mrs. Thomas said, her husband drove with his left hand and kept the pistol pressed against Snyder's body. At Woodland, six miles south of Washington, Thomas' fingers tightened on the pistol and he fired. Snyder slumped in the seat.

"Please take him to a hospital," Mrs. Thomas said she begged her husband.

But Thomas, keeping his eyes glued to the road, never spoke a word. He just kept on driving.

Twenty-three miles east of Fredericksburg Thomas stopped the car and climbed out, the pistol still in his hand. He told his wife:

"I'm going to end all this right now."

He pressed the pistol to his head and fired. At the sound of the shot Mrs. Thomas screamed and ran for help.

Recovering momentarily from the shock of the death of both men, Mrs. Thomas told officers she started for aid, suddenly remembering that she was near the home of Mrs. Elmer Morris, a sister-in-law. Officers were summoned by the Morris family.

By this time it was 4 a. m. Officers found Thomas lying in the roadside with a bullet in his head. Snyder was sitting erect in the car.

Mrs. Thomas was questioned by Commonwealth's Attorney Joseph Billingsley and Trial Justice B. Wyatt Walker. Billingsley, who also acts as county coroner, returned a verdict of "suicide and murder" after two hours of questioning. During all the questioning, Mrs. Thomas, nervous and distraught, wept bitterly.

While Mrs. Thomas remained in seclusion, funeral arrangements were made for the victims.

Snyder's estranged wife, who is a stenographer for the State Department here went to Fredericksburg to view the body of her husband. She made arrangements for its return to the Chambers Funeral Home at Fourteenth and Chapin streets northwest this morning. Services will be held tomorrow.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Snyder remained behind locked doors with friends in an apartment house in the 1900 block P street northwest, where she and her husband lived before they were separated a few months ago.

The family of Thomas arrived from their home in Potomac Mills in Westmoreland County, Va. Thomas will be buried in Pope's Creek Church, near where he was born. Services will be held today at 4 p. m.

Mrs. Elisabeth Burling Sampson, widow of Rear Admiral William T. Sampson, who led the United States Navy's Atlantic squadron during the Spanish-American War, died Monday at the home of her son, Commander Ralph E. Sampson, retired, of 4622 Thirty-second street, North Country Club Hills, Clarendon, Va. She was 85.

She was well known in Washington. After the death of Rear Admiral Sampson in May, 1902, she made her home at 1613 New Hampshire evenue northwest, where she had lived until two years ago.

She is survived by a sister, Mrs. Joseph Walker, of Rochester, N. Y.; a daughter, Mrs. W. T. Cluverius, wife of Rear Admiral W. T. Cluverius, stationed at San Pedro, of New York City.

Funeral services will be held tomorrow at 3 p. m. at the Fort Myer Chapel. Burial will be in Arlington National Cemetery.

Death of Woman Is Laid to Traffic

Although an inquest date has been postponed pending the return of two vacationing witnesses, the death of Mrs. Mary Maguire, 79, injured July 8 when an automobile careened across a sidewalk and struck her, was declared to be a traffic fatality by Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald yesterday. Total accident deaths for the year now number 55.

Mrs. Maguire died Monday. She was struck and injured severely when an automobile said to have been driven by Louis F. Lombardy, 43, of the 900 block of Jackson street northeast, jumped a curb and ran onto the front yard of the Maguire home at 3100 Tenth street northeast. Mrs. Maguire was mowing the lawn.

Lombardy, arrested soon after the woman's death, was released in custody of his attorney pending the inquest. Coroner MacDonald said Mrs. Maguire died as a result of the accident injuries.

Gen. H. O. Williams Dies in California

Brig. Gen. Herbert O. Williams, U. S. Army, retired, died on August 13 at Glendale, Calif., the War Department announced yesterday. He was 70.

A graduate of the Military Academy at West Point, Gen. Williams served in the Philippines, where he was superintendent of police; in Cuba, Hawaii, the Canal Zone and on various tours in Washington. He was a graduate of both the Army War College and the Infantry-Cavalry School. He wore the Distinguished Service Medal.

Gen. Williams is survived by his widow, Mrs. Gertrude Williams, of Terriel, Tex., and a sister, Mrs. C. H. Clistom, of Tupelo, Miss.

R. H. Read, Former D. C. Lawyer, Dies

Robert H. Read, 72, former patent lawyer, of Washington, died yesterday after a week's illness, according to an Associated Press dispatch from Allentown, Pa.

He was graduated from the National University Law School in 1882. He also was a graduate of Lehigh University in 1878. Mr. Read retired from active practice in 1928 and has since lived at Coopersburg, near Allentown. He is survived by one son.

Artist Prince Troubetzkoy Dies in Virginia

World-Renowned Painter to Be Buried Near Charlottesville.

By the Associated Press.

Charlottesville, Va., Aug. 25.—Prince Pierre Troubetzkoy, 72, artist of international distinction and second husband of the authoress, Amelie Rives, died at 1:30 a. m. today at Castle Hill, near Cobham, Albemarle County. He was stricken with a heart attack late yesterday afternoon from which he failed to rally.

Funeral services will be held at 4:30 p. m. tomorrow at the Castle Hill estate, with burial in the family plot near the grave of William Cabell Rives, twice United States Minister to France.

Prince Troubetzkoy's last years were intensely devoted to his art, the last exhibition of which was held in June at the University of Virginia's Museum of Fine Arts.

Born in Milan, Italy, April 19, 1864, the son of Prince Pierre Troubetzkoy and Ada (Winans) Troubetzkoy, the Russian artist went to England at an early age to paint.

Among his best portraits were those of Gladstone, now in the National Gallery at Edinburg and in the National Portrait Gallery at London, and one of the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava, which hangs in the Town Hall at Dover, England.

In 1881, he was introduced by Oscar Wilde to Amelie Rives, whose first novel, "The Quick and the Dead," had attained great popularity about the time of her first and unsuccessful marriage to John Armstrong Chaloner.

The prince and the young Virginia authoress were married two years later, and they finally settled at "Castle Hill," historic estate near the hamlet of Cobham, a few miles from here. In the eighteenth century brick house with its row of white columns, said to be the longest in Virginia, and surrounded by a maze of tall boxwoods, Prince Troubletzkoy continued his work amid tranquil surroundings

He painted for the University of Virginia a portrait of Dr. Philip Bruce, a scholarly historian of that institution, and also painted a likeness of Archer Huntington, which was hung in Instituto de Valencia de Juan at Madrid.

His home was situated not far from Merrie Mills, where Chaloner lived for many years after his dispute with his New York family over the question of his sanity. Chaloner, whose name was Chanler until he had it changed, attracted wide attention through coinage of the phrase "who's looney now?"

Princess Troubetzkoy survives.

Mrs. Veerhoff, Social Service Leader, Is Dead

Capital Art Dealer's Wife Headed Numerous Organizations Here.

Mrs. Otto L. Veerhoff, social service and educational worker, died yesterday at her home, 604 Aspen street northwest.

Mrs. Veerhoff was born in Fort Scott, Kans., and educated at Lake Erie College, Vassar College and George Washington University. She was graduated from George Washington in 1905, in the same class with her husband, now proprietor of the Veerhoff Art Gallery, 1512 Connecticut avenue.

President Harding appointed Mrs. Veerhoff chairman of the board of the National Training School for Girls. Later she was re-appointed by President Coolidge.

At one time or another she was president of numerous Washington organizations, including the local branch of the American Association of University Women, the College Women's Club, the Takoma Park Women's Club, the Takoma Park Home and School Association, the Takoma Park Friendship Club, the Takoma Park Baptist Ladies Aid Association and the Columbia Junior High School Parent-Teacher Association.

Until her illness forced her to resign, Mrs. Veerhoff was president of the National Capital division of the Women's National Farm and Garden Association. She also was a member of the Twentieth Century Club, the Juvenile Protective Association, the District Federation of Women's Clubs and the Social Hygiene Society. She also was active in the Y. W. C. A., the Monday Evening Club, the Florence Crittenton Association, the English-Speaking Union and the Vassar Alumni Association.

Surviving, besides her husband, are two daughters, Amy L. and Abigail W. Veerhoff; a son, O. L. Veerhoff, jr.; her mother, Mrs. G. S. Warn, and a sister, Mrs. Lloyd S. Tenny.

Funeral services will be conducted tomorrow morning at Gawler's undertaking establishment by the Rev. Charles G. Gunn, a cousin and childhood playmate of Mrs. Veerhoff.

John D. Leonard Rites Will Be Held Tomorrow

Funeral services for John D. Leonard, organizer of the Washington Savings Bank and retired lawyer, who died Monday at his residence, 1775 Euclid street northwest, will be held tomorrow at 9:30 a. m. at his home. Requiem mass will be said at St. Paul's Church at 10 a. m., and interment will be in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

Mr. Leonard is survived by his wife, Mrs. Agnes Reagan Leonard; a sister, Miss Elizabeth Leonard; two daughters, Miss Mildred Eleanor Leonard and Mrs. John Carlyle Ruddy, and two sons, Robert Mackin Leonard and Daniel Dillon Leonard.

Belated Or Premature?

Somewhat paradoxically, the announcement of plans for improvement of Washington Airport came as a surprise. Everyone in this vicinity must be familiar with the dire need of the Capital City for a more adequate landing field. Yet it seems a little curious for the National Airport Corporation to inaugurate a $100,000 improvement plan while the Airport Commission set up by Congress is engaged in the selection of a site for a permanent air terminal.

Elaborate plans for the construction of a model airport, with the present landing field as a nucleus, have already been worked out. These plans have been made contingent, however, upon acquisition of the site by the Government. The airport corporation has freely emphasized the inadequacy of the existing facilities. But up to the present time it has used this argument chiefly as a spur to the incredible apathy of Congress in this matter.

It is easy to understand the corporation's annoyance over the continued official delay in facing up to the problem. Only good fortune has prevented serious accidents on this field, bisected as it is by an important highway. If the company could eliminate this hazard on its own initiative, its action would be applauded regardless of the current airport study. But that menace will not be removed by the improvement program contemplated. The proposed hard-surfaced runways may add somewhat to the safety of flying from the local field, but does that advantage justify an expenditure of $100,000 for improvements that might prove useless in a relatively short time if another airport site should be chosen?

Of course, no one would be inclined to discourage the corporation from improving the airport by use of its own funds. If that is to be its policy, however, it seems a pity that the program of development was not undertaken sooner. Coming at a time when the Airport Commission is attempting to choose a site for a permanent terminal, it unfortunately lends itself to interpretation as a gesture to influence the commission's choice.

Mystery Still Remains.

"Part of the business of being human," writes John Hodgdon Bradley in the current issue of the Yale Review, "is to costume somber facts in pleasing fancies. Nature is not content to round our little lives with sleep, but must fill us with dreams while we are yet awake." The burden of his complaint seems to be that such dreams and fancies are too often carried over into scientific research.

Prof. Bradley entitles his essay "In The Beginning." But he makes no attempt to throw new light upon the origin of life. Rather his objective is to clear away the debris of discarded theories as to how and when living creatures first appeared on the earth. Chemists and biologists have manufactured an endless series of hypotheses to explain the mystery of the living cell. Pfluger thought he had discovered the difference between living and dead protein in the strange combination of carbon and nitrogen called cyanogen. Dr. Allen speculated upon the kindling of life sparks from the action of lightning upon damp primordial air, and the mingling of chemicals thus produced with earthly elements. But the mystery remains as imponderable as ever.

Many scientists are inclined to believe that life first appeared when conditions on the earth were very different from those existing today. But the most painstaking examination of the oldest known strata, which is believed to have been laid down about 2,000,000,000 years ago, has produced no positive evidence of life in that distant era. Some markings have been identified as algae, seaweed, sponge and worm fossils, but all these could well have originated from inorganic phenomena.

The first very positive evidence of life is found in the Cambrian formations. But, according to Prof. Bradley, the earth was very much like it is today even before that period. The mystery of life cannot be made less baffling by supposing that it sprang into being under strange conditions that cannot be duplicated today.

Some very pertinent questions arise out of these geologic findings. "Three-quarters of the earth's history to the present had been written," Prof. Bradley says, "before life came conspicuously into the record. Life does not lag behind its opportunities today. Why did it apparently do so in the beginning?"

If they speak candidly, the layman and the scientist alike must answer: "I don't know." With all of our scientific research we are woefully ignorant of the basic facts of life. And the hope for new enlightenment from the probings of chemists and paleontologists is not nearly so glowing as it is often pictured. Perhaps it is well, then, that "we like to dream of worlds at either end of living where things shape nearer to the heart's desire."

The Turn Of The Wheel.

Of the inner circle of Bolshevik leaders who inaugurated the dramatic events of November, 1917, and who guided the Soviet regime in those early days when it was struggling for its very existence, only one figure is left in the seats of mighty. That is Stalin.

Lenin lies enshrined in a mausoleum in Moscow, revered as the founder of a new state and a new cult. Trotzky, greatest of his collaborators, is in exile, reviled as a turncoat and a traitor by the regime he was instrumental in founding and defending. Many of their foremost collaborators are dead.

Sverdloff died early enough to have a city named after him. Djerzhinsky, head of the Cheka; Lunarcharsky, first commissar for education; Chicherin, pale and diabetic aristocrat who helped win for Russia a place in the council of nations but who, in the twilight of his life, suffered obscurity and neglect—they are all dead.

Joffe committed suicide in despair over the defeat of his friend, Trotzky. So, more recently, did Tomsky. Now Kamenev and Zinoviev have been lined up against a wall and shot by a firing squad for having, it is alleged, conspired against the life of Stalin. Only Stalin remains. And Stalin today wields more power than was ever wielded by any other individual in the history of Russia, not excluding Lenin, whose mantle he wears.

Revolutions, it has been well said, devour their children. In the French Revolution the zero hour for Danton and Desmoulins followed soon after Mme. Roland and many of her fellow Girondins had mounted the scaffold to the guillotine. That was only a few short months before Thermidor, when Robespierre and Saint-Just met their doom. In five frenzied years only those revolutionists who had fled or had made themselves inconspicuous or, like Barere, has been adept enough to be on both sides of every fence, were left on the scene. In Russia's case the process has taken much longer, so much so that many of the great figures of 1917 were able to live out the full term of their years. But the process has not been dissimilar, although slower, to what took place in France a century and a half ago.

Historical analogies are necessarily imperfect. Only in the broadest sense can the Russian revolution be compared with its French prototype. But in one particular all revolutions are alike.

Sooner or later the energy of revolution must be deflected into the more humdrum channels of peaceful construction. Sooner or later the element of fatigue enters in. The rank and file tire of turmoil and yearn for peace and quiet. That was the secret of Thermidor and that, in part, is the secret of Stalin's success. Trotzky's doctrine of "permanent revolution" appealed for the most part only to permanent revolutionaries. Stalin, by promising a Utopia much more likely of attainment than that which depended on world revolution, struck a responsive chord.

But to the real revolutionists this was nothing short of treason. One need not accept the official explanation of the alleged Zinoviev-Kamenev-Trotzky plot to understand why these "Old Bolsheviks" never took kindly to the Stalinist regime, not only on personal grounds, because it meant their eclipse did they object, but also because being outside the charmed circle of those in power, they could easily persuade themselves that the new rulers of Russia were betraying the teachings of the founders.

At some point or other in its course a revolution must cease revolving. But when that moment comes, the regime must, except for rendering lip-service to old ideals, repudiate its origin. That is why it is so rare that the men who make revolutions remain at the helm of affairs when relative stability is achieved.

Not even Stalin is an exception. Although in the inner circle in 1917, he was then quite obscure. That very obscurity made it possible for him to build his path to the throne.

The Library Request.

In company with those who assess the needs of almost every other District department, the Board of Library Trustees asks for an increase in appropriation for next year's budget. With what may at first glance seem disregard for the Commissioners' instructions to observe the strictest economy in compiling estimates, the trustees apply for $697,692, or 27 per cent more than they were awarded in the 1936-37 allotment. To justify their request, however, they can point to such evidence as a 70 per cent rise in book circulation, and a jump of more than 72 per cent in registered borrowers, since 1930.

Even without invidious comparisons with other cities, the allowances asked cannot be called excessive, particularly when the pared appropriations allotted the library during the past five years are considered. Except for librarians to operate the Georgetown branch, opened last fall, only one addition to the staff has been made since 1932. It may be inquired why the WPA employes assigned to library work have not eased the strain. The answer is given in the trustees' memorandum, accompanying their budget application, which remarks that these workers "require much time-consuming supervision" though noting somewhat sardonically that "they have been reasonably helpful in building maintenance and some special binding work."

But the major part of the requested increase would not be applied to new personnel. For example, an additional $10,000 is asked for binding, a function which becomes all the more important when book circulation is rising rapidly. An increase of $30,000 is asked for the purchase of books and periodicals. Furthermore it is necessary to proceed with the library building program. Plans are complete for a new Petworth library and the old building used by the Conduit road sub-branch is long overdue replacement.

Very soon, too, a new central library must be considered. It would be difficult to enlarge the present overcrowded building in any satisfactory manner. And its site is neither convenient, logical nor desirable for the vital community service which this institution exists to provide.

Our Responsibility Now.

The European war clouds gathered together by the Spanish revolution show signs of breaking up. Following the action already taken by France and Great Britain, Germany and Russia have imposed a complete embargo on all shipments of arms to Spain. From Rome comes the welcome news that the Italian government regards this step as meaning that the long-sought international accord on nonintervention is now in effect.

There are real reasons to hope, therefore, that the Spanish struggle can be kept localized. The developments taking place in the Iberian peninsula, where a great nation is being ruined by fratricidal strife, are terrible enough. But the disaster to all of civilization would be immeasurable should a general war arise out of the intervention of the powers on opposite sides in the Spanish struggle.

It was no easy matter, getting the principal European nations to agree to keep their hands off Spain. The fabric of peace is wearing dangerously thin. Indeed, coincident with improvement in the international aspects of the Spanish crisis, the race in armaments has been given a new impetus by Germany's decision to double the term of compulsory military service in that country. None the less, success for the French plan of co-operative nonintervention is a welcome indication that the leading European nations have at least agreed to prevent Spain from becoming another Sarajevo, in spite of their conflicting interests in the outcome of the revolution.

But the French plan will not be worth the paper it is written on if governments not directly bound fail to co-operate in seeking the vital objective. In particular, a solemn duty rests upon the United States Government, and upon the American people, to keep our record completely clear in this matter.

The very fact that both the Spanish government and the rebels are now to be cut off from adjacent sources of supply of war material will inevitably lead to an increase of the pressure on our manufacturers. Both sides in Spain will undoubtedly seek to purchase American arms, munitions and airplanes, either directly or indirectly, offering highly favorable terms. Nor can it safely be assumed that long-range considerations will outweigh the chance of rapid profiteering in supplying those urgent needs.

Legislation empowering direct prevention of such sales is unfortunately lacking. But the efficient export licensing system now operated by the Department of State can be made to serve the same end. Any licenses granted for American exports of any arms to Spain should be given immediate and full publicity. Public opinion could then be counted upon to pillory such merchants of death as might seek to prolong the Spanish horror in order to line their pockets with blood-stained gold.

The Rattler Market.

From the Richmond Times-Dispatch.

Chinese, it seems, do not regard fried rattlesnakes as a delicacy. They have often been accused of devouring mice, and it is well known that birds' nests are among their favorite dishes, but one gathers that they do not relish snake cutlets.

At least that is the concluson one draws from the experience of "Big Boy" Gillespie, North Carolina Negro, who took a 59-inch rattler from his native State to Gotham the other day when he drove a truckload of oranges to market there.

Some one suggested to "Big Boy" that he might sell the snake to a Chinese restaurant, it being stated that Chinese like to eat fried rattler. But the policeman on duty opposite a certain restaurant in Chinatown was startled shortly thereafter to see a frightened Negro rush out of the door, with a box under his arm, pursued by several wildly gesticulating Orientals.

When last heard from, the cops were endeavoring to dispose of the 6-foot reptile to the Central Park Zoo. Meanwhile the Chinese have been vindicated. Although certain Americans regard rattlesnake meat as particularly toothsome, and some of them pronounce the Blue Ridge rattlers of Virginia even more tasty than the California variety, there appears to be no basis for the charge that snakes are among the favorite entrees at Chinese tables. Just as chop suey is typically American and not indigenous to China, so it is the Americans, and not the almond-eyed Asians, who like to dine on Crotalus adamanteus atrox. Thus is another folk-myth debunked.

The Lesson Of Spain.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Let us drive home to the people of this country the lesson of Spain, the lesson of hasty one-sided judgments, with their resulting bitterness and destruction.

How often has history demonstrated the needless cruelty of revolutionary fanaticism, as it has the substantial progress of freedom and justice in those countries where people were willing to go more slowly and to meet each difficulty as it came. Europe has fallen prey to the extremists under their excessive partisanship, with its rigid classifications, the strain upon human life becomes unendurable, true art and science cannot breathe, and civilization, always the work of perfect harmony and co-operation, is rigid like a corpse.

Whatever may be said, thank heaven, America has not yet political parties that stand for too much; that there is still room for individual opinion; still some evidence, despite the assurance of "dirty campaigns," of good humor and fair play. Only in this spirit can our democracy live, an expression of the people, not of the leaders of some partisan organization.

It must be emphasized again and again that we cannot afford to be dominated by the extremist view. We must be on our guard against those little groups, seeking to worm their way into our political structure, who would effect sweeping changes for a dream paradise, only to bind us with shackles of iron, as they seek their chimeras.

A. F. G. E. Affairs.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have noticed with much interest your editorial in The Post of August 21 regarding A. F. G. E. affairs.

You are doubtless aware that our constitution prohibits any strikes or picketing against the Government, but your readers may not understand that, and I should appreciate clarification of any misconceptions that may exist.

I should like also to call your attention to an excellent opportunity to serve Government employes here and elsewhere, in assisting our campaign to set up an appeals board procedure to deal with controversies involving employes and supervisors. Such a board if properly organized, with due safeguarding of the employes' interests, could eliminate a great deal of friction in the Government service, with great prospective improvement in morale.

One Generation To Another.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "Younger Generation Heard From," in The Post of August 24, socked me fair amidships, since it recalled my own day at another high school.

We had one old standby in "Economics and Government." We'd concoct our notion of remedies for what we thought ailed the Government. We knew all the answers—some never before, fortunately, conceived by man—before, however, we had encountered the problems.

The bizarre fantasies resulting, untainted by practical considerations, compare favorably with the extravaganzas and orgies put into actual being by the advanced minds of the New Deal. But since stimulation of ideas, however phony or foggy, is probably one function of education, the only damage was to the paint on the walls.

The greatest menace to the New Deal's Utopian objectives is offered by budget unbalance and topheavy debt, which will, we fear, demand of "Younger Generation" all the "false prosperity" he can cheerfully carry to discount that "mortgaged future."

Does Central High School harbor no representative equally facile with the quill, who takes issue with the writer of Central 36's wholehearted acceptance of New Deal doctrine? In that, as the politicians say in their mellower hours, lies the hope of democracy.

SLIGHTLY OLDER GENERATION

Government Supervision Of Banks

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The reports in the public press concerning the closed Fidelity Building and Loan Association are such as not to allay the apprehension of the victimized depositors. At the time the institution was closed July 18, it was announced that it would probably not reopen "for at least 10 days." And now, after more than a month, the laconic announcement is made that it "probably will be some time before any definite statement can be made concerning the progress of the examination by the receiver."

Let us hope that he has begun his task, which should be so well in hand under an efficient functioning of the office of the Comptroller of the Currency in supervising the banks which are permitted to operate "Under supervision of U. S. Treasury Department," or, "Under U S. Government supervision," that only a short time will be required to complete it.

It would certainly be rendering a public service if some one would explain fully just what is the function of the office of the Comptroller of the Currency with respect to the banks, or what the "banner" concerning Government supervision, under which they are permitted to operate, signifies. From my own experience and observation I am forced to the conclusion that it is "a lure and a snare!"

I admit that the people of the United States are gullible, even in other things than political propaganda, and are "enticed" by the claim of a bank that it is "under Government supervision," to risk their savings in its keeping. This gullibility, I believe, grows out of a real desire to have confidence in our fellow man, and especially in our Government and its agencies. But after two bitter experiences (the second to my discredit for allowing myself to be again deceived), I am now seeking information from some one who knows that will enlighten me on this matter.

These bronze tablets on banks, or the gold lettering on the windows, purporting to synonymize with "safety," should at least be assurance against such prenotices as "The camels are coming," and that knowledge or even suspicion of irregularities by the examiners precludes authorization of dividend payments, such as was permitted on June 30, in case of the Fidelity, just 18 days before the bank was ordered closed. If "under supervision by the U. S. Treasury Department" does not mean just that—supervision while supervision is needed—then in fairness to the public, the "mantle of pretense" should be doffed, and the big brass signs changed to read, "If this bank fails, the Treasury Department will take charge, and superintend an investigation which will probably require several months, or years (don't ask how the investigators are paid), and the distribution of the remnants, if any, to the victims."

Is this pessimism? Call it what you will. It is a natural reaction in feeling to an unjustifiable lack of appreciation of a sacred obligation of some of our Government officials in high places.

I hope our candidates for the Presidency, of whatever party, will declare themselves (as one has already done) in favor of stricter banking laws, or at least in favor of enforcing the laws already on the statute books and see to it that neglect of duty gets its just reward. Until then the signs on our banks concerning Government supervision should be followed by a question mark.

Summer Carnival Loss.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The end of summer approaches and local churches, lodges, etc., feel an aching void in the region of the treasury. Their winter welfare budgets must be drastically curtailed and building projects that would materially aid employment must be delayed. There is a reason for this: The "vicious" corn game and wheel of fortune are taboo. The colorful carnivals whose blinking lights dotted Washington throughout the open-air season are the victims of a puritanical construction of a law that was never intended to apply to such innocent forms of diversion.

Strange to say, however, the law seems inadequate in the case of bona-fide commercial gaming. Its strong right arm may swoop down on the unselfish church or lodge worker but must be careful of its case against the big-shot gambler or racketeer. How absurd! Also, was there ever a case made against sweepstakes agents who handle thousands?

It might be relevant to state here that an upper Georgia avenue clergyman informed his congregation Sunday that his building fund lagged just $7,000 on account of the absence of a carnival this summer. That this deficit must be met in another way if the building program was to proceed. That a painless form of fund-raising must be superseded by one that might prove otherwise.

I would suggest that interested clergymen and lodge workers treat with the District committees at the coming session of Congress and obtain legislation providing the necessary amendments to permit harmless summer "speculation." The very character of the organizations sponsoring these events is a guarantee against abuse.

CHARLES E. CROSS.

Joseph's Drought Relief.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: An editorial in The Post of August 21 deals with an analogy claimed by the Secretary of Agriculture between the scarcity of grain due to drought in the United States today and that described as existing in Egypt some three thousand or more years ago. The Secretary appears to have used the policy of Joseph in dealing with the famine of old to strengthen the argument in favor of the policies of his own administration.

It would seem to be in order to call attention to certain other results of Joseph's policies for relief, besides the immediate rescue of the people from starvation. The passage in the forty-seventh chapter of Genesis is too long for quotation, but those who are curious as to the complete record can have access to some copy of the Bible in their neighborhood.

It will be found that at the end of the period of scarcity of grain the Egyptian government owned all the farm lands (except those belonging to the church), all the money in the land, and all the livestock; that the farmers had become peons, and were compelled to pay the government a tax of 20 per cent for the privilege of working the farms that they had formerly owned.

Professors In Washington.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Recently in this column have appeared articles condemning the President's use of certain well-known college professors in attempting to solve many of the important problems of Government. Such contributors bore me terribly. Who else is better qualified for such positions than educated men as the ones in question?

These men have dedicated their lives to the study of governmental problems. They are educated in the causes and results of economic and political declines in past history. They are, with a few exceptions, aligned with no party, but are interested only in an efficient solution of the problems confronting them. The sooner Americans place their confidence in these men rather than in political parasites, the better it will be for all of us.

The Post Impressionist

Spiritual Betrayal.

Post Office, Wednesday.

HUNDREDS of Washingtonians must either have heard Washingtonian Ewart Edmund Turner's sermon last Sunday, or have read that interview with the Rev. Mr. Turner subsequently published in The Washington Post. So, while Mr. Turner was truly declaring that German Christianity "faces the catacombs," scores of those hundreds must have wondered what has become of the Christian element in the German Youth Movement—and what has become of Washington's once vivid interest therein.

It seems "only yesterday" that Ernst Pflug lectured here on this topic, setting District hearts aflame with it. Now the Youth Movement has been swallowed by the Nazi Movement. Why?

A detached study of the case has awaited the work of a Russian writer, Nicholas Arseniev, lecturer at the Prussian University of Konigsberg. In a learned volume on metaphysics ("We Beheld His Glory"—Morehouse Publishing Co., Milwaukee) Dr. Arseniev analyzes the rise and fall of the German Youth Movement.

As it grew in strength during the middle postwar years, it altered the entire German outlook. It was not Christian alone, or religious alone, in the creedal use of that term. The whole of Young Germany was on the march; from the wandering boys and girls, with guitar and knapsack, to the passionate apostles of world peace.

But one and all were in protest "against our rotten civilization, its goals of mere money-making and mere enjoyment." Despite "posing and mannerism, much that was immature, even foolish, there was a sense of being grasped by the primal power of life."

And it is with this "awakening to a deeper spiritual wisdom, a deepened appreciation of reality," that Arseniev deals. He stresses its non-pagan manifestations and sharpens the contrast between its joyous beginning and its calamitous end.

Then he points out the Christian tints in the movement's complexion:

It took them from Karl Barth's picture of the ancient truth that the Divine Wisdom, breaking through into time from eternity, infusing the spiritual into the material, transfigured the material world—the realization that, in Arseniev's phrase, "eternal life has already conquered, although (the complete) victory will become fully apparent only in the future."

Thus Gogarten and Sporri preached, and youth flocked to them. Gubel cried: "There is something which makes upon us absolute demands not created psychologically by a concealed self-interest; all our actions must be made of service to God!" And Joachim Bock asserted: "The Spirit of God (has) made us ready . . . Our life becomes a service not rendered to any earthly power, but the service of the Kingdom of God."

The phenomenon was vital, impressive. Yet there soon came one or two voices which, in that flowering wilderness, were raised against the peril of its perversion. Arseniev warned that it "might be developed along political lines."

And that danger at last attacked.

It won, Arseniev argues, through the leaders' abandonment of the Christian vision and the adoption of a pseudo-paganism. The movement gradually reversed its philosophy. The theory of the Apostolic Age concerning the transfiguration of the material by the spiritual was bit by bit surrendered for the Olympian theory that the material is the only absolute.

Stefan George and his school introduced their cult of the Young Hero. Buhler's books, "unhealthy and sometime repellent manifestations," came into vogue. Then whatever divinity remained to the movement "was thought of merely as the pantheistic nature-god." Consequently, the Christian Spartanism faded—and, when moral resistance had reached its lowest ebb, a religion of perverted nationalism rushed easily in.

Wilhelm Hauer had written: "There is one thing which unites us (in the Youth Movement), 'the unresting longing for God.'" Yet Hauer, Arseniev notes, is now "one of the chief antagonists of the Christian religion in Germany, the most conspicuous leader of the new paganism of Race." "Freideutsche Jugend" avers: "The German deity is a confidence in . . . the inevitability of a new and glorious resurgence of our race."

In short, Arseniev sees the history of the German Youth Movement as the history of a Christian ideal betrayed for a pagan ideal which was then swallowed up by a nationalism that had turned monstrous. "National values are, or can be, noble and beautiful. But they are not ultimate; they are conditional, derivative, partial. They belong in a series which leads up to the Ultimate Good, to which they ought to be subordinated . . . Treated as the final Good, these virtues become idols." And again: "One has raised one's nation to its highest point when one has definitely subordinated it to God."

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler.

Rube Correspondents.

Once a year a magazine called Country Home selects the best rural newspaper correspondent for a few days' visit to New York, thus kicking up a little gust of publicity for Country Home Magazine and rediscovering the fact that the old-fashioned "Ye Editor" type of country journalism has been laid away with the tramp printer and the ice cream social on the lawn of the Congregational Church.

This year's champion is Mrs. Susan Frawley Eisele, who lives near Fairmont, Minn., and writes a weekly column called "With a Penny Pencil" for the Fairmont Daily Sentinel. Mrs. Eisele is a high school graduate who reads books on political economy, and the interviews with her bespeak a little surprise, because she is neither illiterate nor a wide-eyed and somewhat apprehensive Aunt Samanthy in a sunbonnet, afraid to leave her hotel on account of "them white-slavers who lurk in every New York doorway waiting to snatch a country girl to a fate which is worse than death."

Her husband, who farms 80 acres and writes a column for another country paper in the neighboring town of Blue Earth, was unable to accompany her, but she did bring her 2-months-old son. Mr. Eisele probably does a good column, too.

Traditions die hard, but, as the heroine of the present incident suggests by her composure in the big city and the intelligence of her remarks, the country paper has undergone a great change in, say, the last 25 years. Education is common, people get around and the wire services have been extended to points which formerly received only a few hundred closely skeletonized words of news summary per day or twice a week.

Moreover, although Mrs. Eisele has never seen New York before—a consideration which might have had some bearing on her selection for this excursion—there are thousands of men on country papers who have been here and many who have traveled abroad. The schools of journalism have had a hand in the improvement of the country press, too, and the rube correspondent with his or her monotonous and often comic repetition of local family names and exchanges of Sunday visit among the home folks, has been supplanted by a rural reporter who can spell and, in many cases, write.

The rube correspondent made his name and became a tradition in the day of the horse and buggy and the dirt road and before the Nation took to driving the young through school a good deal the same as cattle are forced through the dipping trough for the sake of their health.

True, a good many victims of this fad immediately shake themselves and shed their grammar and learning before it has a chance to soak in, and some don't even get wet. But the general result has been an advance in education which not only produces a more sophisticated type of newspaper work but demands it out along the R. F. D.

Thus, nowadays, one sees in many of the smalltown papers a grade of technical and mechanical performance superior to that of some metropolitan papers, even in the crossroads contributions, which betray thought and a really literary appreciation of life in the neighborhood.

To select the winner of the prize which Mrs. Eisele won this year, and another woman won last year, probably is a job of fine discrimination when the field has been narrowed down to the last hundred candidates.

Yet there is one point in which the small-town journalist and rural correspondent is weak, and that is candor about his community. He is a neighbor to his neighbors, obliged to pull his punches for the sake of his peace, and in pulling his punches he defends the old superstition that those who live in God's great outdoors somehow are closer to God and more like Him than the people of New York or Chicago.

The rural writer knows, of course, that life in a small town does not consist merely of matching pennies at the Elite Lunch or an occasional batch of bathing-beauty post cards from the mail order art firm which advertises in the detective magazines. He knows, in fact, that in the matter of, let us say mischief, his community has the same per capita rating as any big city in the country, but the personal element is important, so the character of the country town is not accurately reflected in the country press.

In this respect the city papers are more honest, and the cities bear their reputation for evil with a superior pride which is not justified by reality.

County Home Magazine will have to shake up the routine next year if the publicity value of these excursions is to be maintained. Two years running, now, country ladies have come to New York to be astonished, and neither one has attempted to blow out the electric light. Possibly both of them, when they were let alone at night, turned to the Wall Street closing prices to see what was doing today.

Co-Op Dividends

Britain's Wholesale Co-operative Society Distributes Profits For 71st Consecutive Year At Rate Of 4 1-6 Per Cent.

By the United Press.

London.

BRITAIN'S giant Co-operative Wholesale Society has declared a dividend of 4 1-6 per cent on its £12,009,378 of share capital. Thus its record continues unbroken. In the 71 years of its existence as the manufacturing and wholesale unit of the English co-operative societies, it has never missed a dividend.

Occasionally the dividend has been small; on the other hand, under the constitution of the C. W. S. it can never be more than 6 per cent. Generally it is around 5 per cent, but in 1936 when money became cheap in Britain and people poor, the C. W. S. lowered the rate on its shares to 4 per cent and handed the difference back to its member societies in the form of "dividends" on their purchases from the C. W. S.

The C. W. S. is the "big business" end of the co-operative movement with 140 factories and workshops, a fleet of steamers, a bank, an insurance company, tea plantations and depots in Africa and the Far East.

It started in 1836 with a paid-up capital of only £2,455 subscribed by local societies with a membership of 18,337. Yet it had a turnover the first year of £51,857 which jumped the next year to £120,754.

Local Societies Buy One Share For Two Members

ITS SHARES, which have a par value of £5, can only be purchased by co-operative societies. Each society must purchase at least one £5 share for every two members, but it can purchase as much more as it likes. However, few societies do so, for the C. W. S. is a heavy borrower and those retail societies with surplus funds lend them to the C. W. S. instead of buying shares. Thus the balance sheet in January, 1935, showed a share capital of £12,009,372; amount loaned by the societies, £52,757,495, and various reserves and other liabilities of £12,572,554, bringing the balance sheet total up to £77,339,421.

On the assets side, cash at £16,544,364 probably reflects, it is believed, a certain amount of innocent "window-dressing" such as the big British banks used to do until the MacMillan commission in 1931 shamed them out of it. But the C. W. S. has always had plenty of cash. It carries real estate and plants written down to £5,245,062 and investments at £44,441,352.

This society has had in its 71 years only one really tough year. That was in 1921 when the bottom fell out of all the commodity markets and the directors faced a heavy loss on their immense and varied inventory, purchased at the peak prices of 1920. They paid in full the interest due on the money they had borrowed from the member socities and a small return on their share capital, but this left a deficit of £4,581,235 and they paid no dividends to members on their purchases. They had a nominal deficit in 1918 and also in 1920, but nothing to bother about.

By 1925 they had got their annual surplus back to £1,000,000 and they passed through the current depression without trouble. In 1932, which was the "trough of the depression" for British retail trade, the C. W. S. surplus reached a new peak of £1,692,157; in 1934 it was £2,052,498.

£42,889,000 Returned To Consumers In 71 Years.

DURING the course of its 71 years the C. W. S. has returned to the consumers who belong to the local societies the handsome sum of £42,889,000.

Its total turnover in goods during that period has been astronomical, £2,070,954,968.

Surrounding the co-operative wholesale society are 1,040 local societies, mainly of consumers. Each of these local societies has its share capital. In most cases you have to own one £1 share and they are always glad if you can pay for it on the spot. But a housewife may join her local society by paying down one shilling as a deposit on the purchase of the 20-shilling share; then when she gets her "dividends" on her purchases, usually half-yearly, she can apply her dividend toward the payment in full of her one share.

Not all of the local societies can boast of an unbroken dividend record on their capital. In fact, some of them—in depressed mining areas, in bankrupt textile towns, or in abandoned steel towns like Jarrow—have to shoulder a good part of the local relief burden. One of the eight ironclad rules laid down by the Rochdale Co-operative Pioneers in 1844 was that there must be no credit—all members pay cash for whatever they get from the society just as the society, in turn, is expected to pay cash for whatever it buys. About the only thing the current depression has done to the English and Scottish co-operative movements is to "bust" this rule completely. Credit is extended in worthy cases, and the puritans in the movement look the other way.

Depression Caused Changes In Policy.

HERE ARE two other tendencies in the movement which may be traced to the depression.

One is a tendency, strongly urged by the C. W. S., to establish fixed prices all over the country for certain lines of goods which the C. W. S. manufactures and which it would like to advertise. This is being done now in furniture. The C. W. S. believes that it will increase sales, but the local societies which have always had a free hand, subject to the rule that they must sell at the "prevailing local price," in adjusting prices to suit themselves, rather dislike the idea.

The other tendency is toward lower prices for the goods sold which, in turn, result in lower dividends to members.

The average prosperous local co-operative can, without much trouble, return to its members from 10 per cent to 12½ per cent of the amount which the members have spent with it. The higher the dividend the more successful the local society. The founders of the movement regarded this as a form of thrift—the housewife's money was saved for her and returned to her at the end of the year.

But with thousands upon thousands of members in straitened circumstances during the depression, a good many societies, especially in Scotland, argue that low prices for such necessities as food, clothing and footwear are far more important than cumpulsory saving. So they tend more and more to shave prices, which brings them closer to the rival Swedish Co-operative principle of "low prices and low dividends."

Budget Reform Put Into Effect In Kwangtung

Opium and Smuggling Also Assailed in Effort to Purge Province.

By the United Press.

Canton, Aug. 25.—T. V. Soong, finance commissioner of Kwangtung Province, tonight announced that the government was moving rapidly to solve Kwangtung's financial problems and was once more bringing order to the much-abused provincial treasury.

Soong said the finance department, which he took over from the Chen Chi-Tang regime, was dealing with the tax problem as a separate item for the first time in a decade. He listed a six-point policy which he said already was being carried out:

1. Reduction or abolition of exorbitant or illegal taxes.
2. Stabilization of the Kwangtung dollar and national yuan.
3. Eradication of gambling.
4. Eradication of opium smoking.
5. Suppression of smuggling.
6. Strict budgeting and auditing of provincial funds along modern accountancy principles.

Soong said the previous regime failed to secure its notes with an adequate reserve, leaving a large deficit which the Central government in Nanking is now eliminating. Shanghai and Nanking financial experts are also studying this problem.

Soong's hatred of opium smuggling is intense. His ambition is to eliminate the habit from the province within three years. His first act upon arrival here was to telegraph the Central government for aid from the Central Opium Suppression Commission.

Soong promised that the most stringent measures will be adopted to stamp out the widespread smuggling throughout the province. He said the customs and other preventive services have been revitalized and will be given every facility to carry out their duties.

The following problems face the Kwangtung government and must be given the earliest attention, he said.

1—Reorganization of the finance department and other branches of the provincial government.

2—Stimulation of provincial industry and agriculture.

3—Resuscitation of Canton's export trade.

4—Relief for overseas Chinese, about 80 per cent of whom are from Kwangtung.

Japanese Deny China's Charge Of Aggression

'Violent' Nanking Attitude Cited at Institute of Pacific Relations.

By the Associated Press.

Yosemite, Calif., Aug. 25.—Counter-charges that China was "unfriendly" and sometimes "violent" toward Japan marked a Japanese answer before the Institute of Pacific Relations today to repeated Chinese assertions that the Tokyo government practiced "aggression."

In an "emergency" plenary session requested by Japanese representatives to reply to criticism of Japan's conduct in China, Kenkichi Yoshizawa, former Japanese minister to Nanking, asserted the only remedy for the situation was more conciliation on both sides.

"I do not feel that everything Japan did in the past was right," said Yoshizawa, "but I am equally convinced that what China did was not always correct."

"Unfortunately," he added, "in such international convocations as the peace conference in Paris and the Washington conference we have been made a subject for vituperation.

"I feel the best way to bring about desired harmonious relations is for China to change this attitude and co-operate with Japan.

Yesterday, the institute, an unofficial body of statesmen and economists, heard Dr. Hu Shih, of the National University of Peiping, assert Japan was to blame for much of China's troubles and the Chinese were ready to fight for their "existence."

The remarks of the usually pacifistic Dr. Hu, on top of last week's discussions concerning Japan's drive for a place in the world's markets, stirred the Japanese representatives to action. They asked for the "emergency" plenary meeting in which to reply.

After Japan led in co-operative moves such as the restoration of tariff economy to China in 1929, the Chinese reciprocated "in the unfriendliest manner," Yoshizawa said, by raising tariffs. He said this not only adversely affected Japanese trade, but also the Chinese themselves.

Among the "unfriendly acts" of China toward Japan, Yoshizawa said, was the construction of railroad lines paralleling the Japanese operated South Manchurian Railway in North China. He contended this was a violation of treaty obligations and led to the 1931 "incident" which started the Japanese advance into Manchuria.

Reich Catholics

New Campaign Reported Beginning To Defame Clergy; Legal Action Against Orders Expected In September.

Dr. Ewart Edmund Turner, former pastor of the American Church in Berlin, and now of Washington, has just returned from a tour of investigation throughout the Third Reich. He interviewed numerous Protestant and Catholic church officials and Jewish leaders, and presents his conclusions in a series of four articles, of which this is the first.

By Dr. Ewart Edmund Turner.

A POLITICAL BATTLE against Catholicism, vaster than Bismarck ever dared conceive, is rapidly gaining momentum in Germany. Its announced purpose is to free the German people from the political activities of Rome. But its real purpose is to weaken Christian faith and practice, and to remove a chief obstacle to the de-Christianization of youth in the Third Reich.

The Nazis have found powerful weapons for this attack on Catholicism in the currency-smuggling scandals which involve certain monasteries and in the prosecution of certain Franciscan lay friars on charges of homosexuality. Unitedly the Catholic bishops admit and condemn such currency smuggling and abnormal practices as exist, but protest against judging a tree by its fallen fruit or an army by its deserters. Nevertheless, the Nazi press has taken these incidents as the basis for a ruthless campaign of defamation such as no Christian body has had to withstand in a hundred years, except in Marxist countries.

This writer has just visited church leaders authorized to deal with these smuggling and homosexual charges. He found frank admissions of guilt. The picture painted in the Nazi party press, however, is a wild distortion of the facts involved. No mention is made in connection with the smuggling charges, for example, that the German monasteries were attempting to pay back funds which they had borrowed from church organizations outside Germany. Monastic leaders faced a choice between evils: Either refusing to pay their debts or else playing loose with Schacht's labyrinthian currency regulations.

In fact, most monastic leaders were unaware that the law was being violated, for they were victims of that mysterious personage, Dr. Hosius. This banker Hosius approached monastic officials with alleged authority from ecclesiastical superiors. He assured the treasurers of the monasteries that under certain conditions money could be transferred legally into foreign countries; he then volunteered his services as an expert on currency regulations. When suspicion began to arise Dr. Hosius fled over the border into Holland, but not before he had compromised many of monasticism's highest officials in Germany. One responsible Protestant spokesman made this comment to the writer: "One might almost believe that some enemy of the church has used Hosius as a tool."

Nazis Malign Celibates By Press Exaggeration.

NAZI NEWSPAPERS are instructed to display this currency smuggling as a typical sample of monastic corruption. With even more rapture the propaganda machine seized on the unsavory facts disclosed in the Coblenz trials of the Waldbreitbach Franciscan friars. This summer the writer attended these trials in Coblenz, visited the accused in jail, interviewed the authorized representatives of the prosecution and defense. There is no doubt but that a vicious net of homosexuals, lead by an ordained priest, existed in this monastic order. Cardinal Faulhaber, of Munich, has condemned the scandalous acts of these friars in this language: "This desecration of the moral law cries to heaven and no one can condemn it more sharply than the church itself."

An equal desecration of the moral law, however, is the manner in which this isolated case is generalized by the Nazi press to malign all celibates. Again basic facts are ignored. The German people are forbidden to learn that these "Franciscans" are neither priests nor members of the historic Franciscan order. The potential fruitage of this campaign against Catholic orders can be seen in the symptomatic action this summer taken in Weilheim. The city council of this Bavarian town voted to change the name of their Franciscan street—the name Franciscan being no longer appropriate in Germany.

Within the last 100 years numerous lay organizations have sprung up in Germany to meet the demands of practical social service. There are 3,000 lay friars and 75,000 sisters in Germany today. The friars are organized into lay orders, each of which selected the name of a patron saint. The Waldbreitbach brothers happened to choose St. Francis. Only ignorance or malevolence can explain the screaming Nazi headlines which place the deeds of these lay brothers at the feet of the traditional Franciscan order. The lay order was founded 70 years ago, while the Franciscan order was founded 700 years ago by St. Francis himself. Furthermore, not one of the Waldbreitbach brothers is a monk; yet one reads daily of the "trial of the Franciscan monks." All Franciscan priests are thoroughly educated; the Waldbreitbach Franciscans have no advanced training whatever.

Plan Fails To Divide Hierarchy And People.

THUS FAR the effort of the Nazis to drive a wedge between hierarchy and people has failed. Bishops and priests in all parts of Germany informed me that since May, when the trials began, church attendance has been larger than ever. One of the recent issues of Streicher's Steurmer bears a cartoon which has greatly wounded Catholic feelings. Across the entire front page runs the headline "Lost to the People." The sub-title reads, "The Truth About Monastic Life." Then follows a half-page cartoon entitled "Unfruitful." A blonde maiden is being seduced by a caricatured Jew; alongside this is a picture of a monk and a nun in front of a cross. "Belonging to the Church," is the inscription under the monk and nun; "Sworn to Satan" we read under the Germanic maiden; then appears this line, "And both lost to the community of the people." Such crude Nazi propaganda is already beginning to work as a boomerang.

Today the fiercest encounter between Nazis and Catholics concerns the Catholic youth. Freedom to maintain their youth organizations is guaranteed to the Catholics by the concordat which Von Papen concluded with the Pope in 1933. But this and other provisions of the concordat have been so flagrantly violated by the Nazis that a powerful group in Catholicism is demanding the rejection of the pretense that Nazi-Catholic relations are still carried on within the framework of the concordat.

Theoretically parents are still allowed to indicate whether they want their children to attend parochial or secular schools. In practice, the party "sees to it" that the parents elect the secular schools. If a parent persists in designating a parochial school he is branded as unpatriotic and must risk the economic consequences which such a label carries in every dictatorship.

Archbishop Urges Union Of Catholics And Protestants.

"WE ARE NOT fighting national-socialist politics or economics," declared the Archbishop of Freiburg in an interview granted to this writer. "But we will fight to the death pagan philosophy wherever it appears. If the opportunity to retain our children is given us we do not fear for the future of Germany. But if that opportunity is taken from us we will carry the fight willingly to martyrdom."

The archbishop stated that the politics of the Center Party is a thing of the past. He maintained that the anti-Christian practices so increasingly prevalent in Germany are causes of grave concern to powerful factions within national socialism. "Why is there not a united Christian front in Germany?" asked the archbishop. "Why do the Catholic and Protestant fronts always assemble alone? If the Catholics and Protestants in Germany were to meet together, with the support of world Christendom behind them, it would create an impression in the Third Reich."

Catholics in Germany look forward with anxiety to the annual party week which will be held again in Nuremberg next month. Experienced leaders predict legal action against the monastic orders. One prominent Catholic even declared that all the monastic orders might be dissolved by edict, just as the party congress last year took the citizenship from all German Jews. This seems too pessimistic a view. But it is not unlikely that a beginning might be made, say by prohibiting the lay orders similar to the Waldbreitbach Brotherhood.

Meanwhile, the spiritual life of German Catholicism seems to be deepening. The youth have not been won away. To test the loyalty of Catholic youth, the bishops announced Trinity Sunday this year as a day of youth demonstration. All over Germany this writer learned that the Catholic churches on this Sunday were crowded to capacity by these Christian youth. Bishops, priests and parents alike reported the results as being far beyond their expectation. Increased church attendance seems partly to be resulting from the weariness of the average man with the political turmoil in Europe, and he is turning once more to the comfort and hope which is found in religion.

stimulate the New Deal search for a long range agricultural program, with the control factor still present.

In whatever program the Administration as such may evolve, the report of the President's Great Plains drought committee to the President this week is expected to play an influential role. The committee, headed by Morris L. Cooke, has been holding exploratory conferences with farmers in many of the drought States, is discussing a general adjustment in land use, and return to grass of large areas in the drought country, with emphasis on local "regroupings" and relocations, rather than wholesale emigrations of farmers out of the area. Retirement of submarginal lands, already going forward under the Resettlement Administration, may figure prominently in their long-range recommendations.

Whether the President will seek a commitment on any of the drought committee's proposals from the Republican Party's Presidential nominee, who as Governor of Kansas will meet with the President and drought State governors later in the West, remains to be seen. Gov. Landon already has made clear that he will participate in the conference only as "Governor of Kansas."

The crop insurance plan, now being worked out for presentation to the next Congress, is of the "payment in kind" variety, under which farmers would set aside a certain amount of their crops each season in return for having the crop insured by the Government. In fat years, these "premiums" would be stored as insurance reserves, and in lean years they would be used to supplement short crops. The AAA is interested in the proposal sufficiently to have ordered a study of the cost of all-risk crop insurance in order to determine an actuarial basis for crop insurance on wheat. Individual production records on wheat for six years are being scanned carefully, along with wheat acreage and other available data.

Called in Fat Years.

One method toward which the AAA is inclining would collect grain "premiums" only in years of excess production, rather than every year. This proposal involves premiums ranging in amount from one-third to two-thirds of the excess yield above normal, and under the plan would cover the cost of insurance up to 75 per cent of the average wheat yield in poor crop years. This, AAA spokesmen argue, would take part of the surplus production off the market, and to that extent strengthen prices. Here again raising of prices through elimination of surpluses is a principal objective.

Secretary Wallace points out that this plan, if adopted, would really become the "ever normal granary plan," with crop insurance requirements serving as an automatic regulator. Invoking a Biblical precedent for his plan, he calls it "the Joseph idea."

As in 1934, the AAA has been troubled recently by outcroppings in the West of the story, spread by some preachers and politicians alike, that the drought was the Lord's way of showing He disapproved of man's tampering with nature's plan.

So, in citing a Biblical precedent for his "ever normal granary," Wallace probably had a purpose, as suggested in a recent speech, when he said:

"It seems to me that if the Lord had a specific human purpose in causing the droughts of 1930, 1934 and 1936, the purpose would be to suggest to the people of the United States the wisdom of working out a modern adaptation of the Joseph plan which would best conserve the interests of the farmers and consumers."

He finds other precedents, he says, in ancient China, where the government bought up a percentage of the crops to be stored away until prices advanced beyond a given point, and in the practice of Mormon women, who stored surplus wheat against a time when crops might be unusually short.

Crop Insurance.

Although not identical with the principles of either commodity loans or crop insurance, AAA "ever normal granary" studies are being directed toward the end of a combination of the three. Proposals are to apply it first to one or two commodities, such as wheat and corn, for experimental purposes. Wallace suggests that "if" it can be made to work "the principle of crop insurance may rank along with soil conservation, good land use, adjustment of supply to demand, and adequate credit as a major element in national farm policy."

Blocked off from direct Federal control of production by the Supreme Court's AAA decision, AAA planners have considered a number of indirect methods of regulating farm output, but find a more likely outlet for their hopes in the proposed linking of "ever normal granary," crop insurance and commodity loans with the proposed State-aid plan written into the soil conservation act.

The interstate compact idea was revived with the passage last session of a law providing that tobacco-producing States may work together under compacts for the purpose of controlling production of, or commerce in, tobacco, with a view to "balancing" production and maintaining prices. There are numerous political, co-operative and quota obstacles in the path of this approach, and its application to other commodities, however.

Another control alternative suggested would provide for the organization of soil conservation districts, supported by local assessments or appropriations out of the State treasury, with the Federal Government making grants-in-aid, in money, materials or services, made available to it by the soil conservation service. Additional authorization probably would have to be made by Congress for the so-called "conservation district" to receive and spend Federal funds under the soil conservation and domestic allotment act.

It becomes increasingly apparent that the AAA does not regard the present soil conservation act as sufficiently binding on farmers to accomplish their aim of a "balanced" production. Although the present drought inroads on surpluses probably has postponed the day of a showdown, they take the view that powers contained in the act are not sufficient to prevent the return of bumper crops, given several years of favorable weather.

U. S. Again in Control.

Under what they consider the "stop-gap" law in operation, farmers receive payments for diverting so-called "soil depleting" crops, including wheat, corn and others, from their basis acreage. Given this leaway, farmers may choose to take some of the less vital crops, such as barley and rye, out of production, in lieu of corn and wheat, and still receive benefits. This is what they did to some extent in 1936, and probably will do on a still larger scale in 1937. With corn and wheat now on an import basis, it is not likely the Administration will seek to discourage such substitutions in 1937. They point out, however, that an abundant crop may result in 1937, and with favorable years possibly succeeding, what they consider the need for regulating production will again return.

To this end, again assuming President Roosevelt is returned, they will grasp at the State-aid plan going into effect in 1938, under which farmers would co-operate for the direct control of production. The Federal Government indirectly again would be at the controls under this plan, for the Secretary of Agriculture is given the power to reject or approve the various State control laws, before Federal grants-in-aid can be made to the States.

A prerequisite will be that the States make control of volume one of the conditions of grants to farmers. Indications are the AAA will attempt to co-ordinate the various State plans to fit into a National pattern. But first, the various States must enact legislation to make this program possible, and whether they will do so or not in sufficient volume to make any such plan practicable, is still a question. To date, only Mississippi, Alabama and South Carolina have adopted enabling legislation, although bills are being considered in several other States, and the AAA is at work on "model" plans.

In striving toward use of the State-aid method of production control, possibly coupled with "ever-normal granary," crop insurance, commodity loans and purchase of submarginal lands, the AAA is staking its hopes on next January, when all State Legislatures will meet in regular session, with the exception of Alabama, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi and Virginia.

Contempt Case Puts Labor Spy Inquiry Aside

Prosecution of 6 Railway Audit Officers Brings Indefinite Delay.

By the United Press.

The La Follette Senate Civil Liberties Committee yesterday temporarily put aside its investigation of the Railway Audit & Inspection Co., industrial detective agency, to concentrate on prosecuting six of its officials on contempt charges.

A hearing scheduled for tomorrow was postponed indefinitely. The next meeting of the committee headed by Senator Robert M. La Follette (Progressive), Wisconsin, will be in mid-September, when the inquiry will turn to activities of the William J. Burns and Pinkerton detective agencies, both of which have submitted their records and are co-operating in the investigation of labor spy activities and civil rights.

This course of action was decided on because the committee believes it has an airtight contempt case against the six officials who failed to appear at a scheduled hearing last week.

Chief Officials Involved.

The six men involved are W. W. Groves, president; W. B. Groves, vice president; L. D. Rice, general manager; J. E. Blair, secretary-treasurer; J. C. Boyer and Robert J. Judge.

Committee strategy was revealed today when District of Columbia Supreme Court Justice James C. Proctor heard argument on a show cause order obtained by Rice seeking a temporary injunction against the directors of his own firm to prevent turning over their records to the Senate.

Argument Cut Short.

Alvin Newmyer, attorney for Rice, started to argue the unconstitutionality of the Senate investigation, but Justice Proctor cut him short. He told Newmeyer he did not see any necessity for a temporary injunction if the hearings were dropped for the time being. On this assurance the Rice case was continued indefinitely.

The committee's contempt case is based on two alleged violations: refusal of the witnesses to appear when summoned and destruction of subpenaed records.

La Follette ruled that a suit of the nature Rice introduced was not sufficient ground to enable the witnesses to avoid attending his hearing. He also introduced testimony showing that after subpenas were served on company officials they destroyed information relating to labor espionage.

Three in Fight.

The three leading aspirants for the Republican nomination for Governor are Justice William F. Bleakley, of Westchester County; Republican leader of the State Senate, George R. Fearon, of Syracuse, and Mayor Rolland B. Marvin, of Syracuse.

The fact that of the three, Justice Bleakley, accompanied by Charles H. Griffiths, Republican leader of Westchester County, was the first to confer with the Presidential nominee led to reports that he was the choice of Gov. Landon for the gubernatorial nominee. But this was denied. It was explained that Gov. Landon was strictly keeping hands off this intra-state row.

The fact that Justice Bleakley was among the first to confer with Gov. Landon was said to have been a coincidence and was not planned. His two opponents for the gubernatorial nomination happened at the time to be in nearby cities detained by speaking engagements, it was said. Fearon and Marvin would be as cordially received by the Kansan as was Justice Bleakley, it was explained.

Nevertheless the view prevailed among some political observers here that Justice Bleakley stood a good chance of emerging victorious in the fight. It is reported that he has the quiet support of Erie County Republican Chairman Edwin F. Jaeckle, one of the first of the New York leaders to declare publicly for the Landon candidacy prior to the Cleveland convention. And then it is argued that undoubtedly Fearon and Marvin, coming from the same city, would eliminate each other.

'Exorbitant' Price Bid For Actor's Bed Linen

Hollywood, Aug. 25 (AP).—Eager buyers jammed in a crowd of curiosity seekers tonight had purchased 400 of the 1,400 lots into which the late John Gilbert's personal belongings were divided for an auction sale.

An agent for Marlene Dietrich, now in Europe, bought the former screen lover's bed linen several days before the auction started. The linen included 32 sheets and 35 pillow cases. Ben Bail auction director, who announced the sale, declined to reveal the purchase price, but described it as "exorbitant."

Boy Who Killed Chum Given Indefinite Term

CHAPTER TWENTY-SEVEN.

Gran on Guard.

Afterward when Eden Faraday thought of that weird, wild day, it seemed incredible that so much had been crowded into 24 hours.

It seemed that years at least must have intervened between the cold dawn when she sat on Coburn's bed listening to his voice breaking in boyish desperation, and the rushing succession of strange occurrences after darkness fell again.

That darkness found the atmosphere of the apartment odd and strained.

Bridget walked about, stiff-lipped and tormented and disapproving, and the antagonism between her and Gran was like a brittle wall of glass that the sudden crash of a word might shatter.

Eden knew that her mother was blaming Gran for everything. For the presence of Gracie Lincoln, sleeping a drugged and exhausted sleep in Robin's deserted bed, for Robin's unexplained absence and for the troubling fact that no one knew where Coburn was.

But most of all Bridget was seeking some one to blame for the panic dread that was so stark in her eyes, for the fact that Sydney Creighton had not telephoned and that she herself was sick with the hollow fear that she had lost him forever.

Gran, fiercely motherly and defensive, had mounted guard, as it were, against her daughter-in-law.

"You needn't blame Eden nor that young Garnett either," she said, firmly, "I took this girl in. I would have taken her in if she had done murder—any girl who came to the door with a pitiful face and heart-breaking story like her story. And she is as innocent as any marble virgin in the church. It might have happened to your own. Thank your saints on your knees that it didn't."

To that Bridget made answer, with a weary inflection of scorn in her lovely voice. "You must have your drama, musn't you, mother? Even if it involves us all in horrible complications."

Gran, clicking her bridgework, with her eyes blazing, had said, with a little triumphant flick, "If I get you into any complications. Bridget Faraday, I'll get you out again!"

Eden strove, sitting quietly beside Gracie's bed, watching the quiver and pulse of the thin white throat so curiously like her own, to think through her own problem.

Two men loved her. Two men had told her so. And her heart was so dead and still. No thrill, no breathless trembling.

For Field she had a deep admiration, mixed a little with fear. He was such a marching lover, flinging down barriers, leaping across moats, possessive, assured, brooking no resistance.

He would be tender, but always this question would intrude. Was he thinking of her or himself first? His pride, his position, condescending a little?

When she thought of Jack Garnett her throat cramped and her eyes misted—but was that love? He was so dear—but the feeling she had was nearer to motherliness. He was so lonely. He needed caring for so much. His buttons would always be loose, his dreams wandering and splendid, needing to have a foundation put under them. And life is not easy for a woman who loves a man like that. The odd part is that women have gone forever seeking through the world for buttons needing thread, hearts needing patching, dreams that drift for want of mooring.

Eden knew, when she was with Garnett, what he was thinking and feeling. He was like holding a strong hand in the dark. She caught herself wanting to be with him always. Was that love?

The clock struck 7. Gracie stirred, drew a short, sobbing breath and turned her face to the wall. She would sleep for hours. Eden knew how paralyzing Gran's pills could be.

Then Gran came tiptoeing to the door. "Robin just telephoned. She said she had just put Coburn on a train going south. Now what do we do?" she whispered huskily.

Eden drew her in, closing the door softly. Bridget's room was only a dozen steps away.

"We'll wait," she said. "Let's not tell mother yet. So much will have to be explained. That horrible girl coming here—no telling what mother will believe. But Robin—how could she——"

"Don't ask me how could anything be," Gran slumped in a chair. "I'll never be surprised again at anything the longest day I live. We won't tell Bridget, then?"

Garnett Returns.

"Let her rest tonight. She was upset anyway when that Raquel came. And Gracie. And she's frantic about Sidney. Coburn promised to write. He promised me solemnly. After all it's his affair. But thank goodness he got away. Gran!"

"Thank somebody. Anyway, my funeral money is still there in my brown pocketbook. I could use a little rest myself. Why don't you get into that bed over there and straighten your legs out? You've been up since daylight."

"Jack Garnett's coming back, Gran."

"He's one of them we need a rest from," Gran said grimly. But there was no hardness in her eyes.

At half-past 7 Garnett came. Eden tiptoed quickly into the living room as Gran let him in.

"Clint?" she asked.

Garnett shook his head. "Still alive—not conscious yet. How is she? We'll have to wake her. I've got to take her across town right away."

"But, Jack—you can't," Eden protested; "Gran gave her a pill—she'll sleep for hours. She's exhausted. She can't stand anything more."

Garnett's mouth drew straight. He looked stern and somehow a little old, standing there turning his old hat in his hands.

"We'll have to wake her. It's our only chance. Everything is set—I'd hoped Clint would rouse and talk—it would make things easy. But he didn't—now everything depends on Gracie. They're ready. We have to take him—tonight."

"Take who?" Gran demanded.

"The man who killed Grappi. The man who tried to kill Clint. Tomorrow it may be Gracie—or Eden. Or me. He won't stop. We'll have to try to wake her. I'm not going to let her be hurt. Burke's men will be there. The lieutenant's squad will be there. She'll be safe. But—she has to go. He might talk—to her. It's a chance—but it's our only chance. If Clint should die tonight—well, tomorrow a lot of us might quietly disappear. No one knows. I know this fellow, I tell you. Help me get her up."

They went softly down the short corridor and Bridget opened her door an inch and said, "What is it, Eden?"

Eden held her voice level. "Only Mr. Garnett, mother. He has come to take Gracie Lincoln away."

"Has she a warm coat? The wind is worse, I think."

"We'll wrap her up carefully, mother. Goodnight."

Gran brought a towel wrung out of icy water and gently began trying to waken Gracie. Eden chafed her thin wrists, cold now, the veins showing blue through the skin. Garnett hung over their shoulders, calling her name. "Gracie! wake up. It's Jack. Wake up, Gracie."

But Gracie only murmured, opened dead looking eyes and stared at them, dully and unwinking, closed them again, shuddered and sank again into relaxed unconsciousness.

Nearing the Killer.

"She won't wake. I gave her two." Gran said.

"What will you do?" Eden looked at Garnett, sorry for him. "Could we carry her?"

"That would be no use. She has to be awake and keen—she has to be able to talk." Garnett sighed. "I'll go back to the hospital," he said, heavily. "Maybe Clint——"

"This means a lot to you, doesn't it?"

"It means catching the dirtiest killer this city has ever known. It's all set. It clicked—too well, I see now. Something was bound to break. Burke gave me a free hand. I showed him that everything depended on Clint—and Gracie. Now—well, it's no use. I'll go telephone Burke——"

But Eden's eyes were suddenly blazing. 'No," she cried. "Don't telephone. I could go! I will go! I could—I could——"

"Go where?" Gran was dry. "You'll go nowhere after a day like this."

But Eden was not listening. She clutched Garnett's sleeve tightly.

"I could do it! I could! Even the police didn't believe me. They thought I was Gracie. Owen Field thought I was Gracie. I could wear her clothes—I could change my hair—you can tell me what to say—"

"O, my God—Eden, No! No! I won't let you. I won't take such a risk—I can't—not with you!"

"You said Gracie would be safe. You said Burke's men would be there. I'm going. Help me, Gran—help me get her dress off! I can be Gracie Lincoln. I can get the man who killed Grappi. I can do it. Help me, Jack—I'm going!"

"Eden—no!" Garnett's face was white. "I say no!"

"Don't be silly—of course I'm going. Get the other sleeve, Gran—and stop crying. No one will hurt me. It can't be any worse than—that night. Those horrible fingers over my mouth. I owe him something for that. Gran—pull! Now, get out, Jack, while I change—and stop glowering. I'm going to do it. Gran was an actress and I can be an actress, too. Only—don't let mother know. I don't want her worried. Please go out, Jack—wait for me in the outside hall."

"We'll have to go down the rear. My car's there. Eden—I can't let you do this insane thing!"

"You're not letting me do it. You're fighting me every inch. But—I'm going to do it."

"Understand—I can't go with you. You'll have to go through it alone."

"I can go with her." Gran fumbled the hooks on Gracie's cheap little skirt as she twisted it off the frail body.

"No—she'll have to do it alone. There will be men there—planted—homicide men——"

"I can be planted, can't I?" persisted Gran. "She's not going unless I go with her!"

"O, Gran—please don't argue and don't delay things."

"I'm going. You wait till I get my coat."

She marched away grimly, little and militant, her eyes brilliant with excitement. She had never been afraid in her life, she was too old to begin. And if ' ' began any shooting—well, women had weapons, too. She opened a cupboard door and took down a small round object and put it in her pocket.

At the foot of the dark rear stairs a man came out of shadow and said, "All set?"

"All set," Garnett answered.

"Good luck," answered the detective. "Wish I could go with you. But orders are orders."

"He'll come alone," Garnett said. "He always goes alone."

"If he comes."

"He'll come."

tion to treat with the Lewis organization.

Patterson's statement said the action is in accordance with a resolution indorsed August 19 at Gary by representatives of the workers. At that time, Van A. Bittner, regional director of the steel workers organizing committee, said representatives of 47,000 workers in the Calumet area voted unanimously to indorse the Industrial Union drive.

Eight employe-representatives of the Carnegie-Illinois answered Van Bittner's statement after the meeting with a charge his claims were untrue and asserting the meeting was "to serve as a steamroller of destruction of employe-representation." They asserted a resolution asking indorsement of the steel drive was offered, but about 35 employe-representatives then "took a walk" and left the steel drive supporters to adopt the resolution.

Names Announced.

Patterson's statement today bore in addition to his own, the signatures of Joseph Gilbert and Charles Jankus, of the South Chicago Works, and Edward Ennis and Michael Ostroski, of the Gary Works.

The statement referred to employe councils for exchanging information on various issues in attempts to get uniform action, and added:

"* * * We realize, as do our fellow representatives, the utter futility of such councils, inasmuch as they are company-dominated and have no financial backing in the way of dues to support any concerted efforts. So * * * we come here to Pittsburgh to place before the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corporation president the true sentiment lying in the hearts of the steel workers and the progressive employe-representatives."

Promotion Agreement.

Something new in the way of collective bargaining among Federal employes—a promotion agreement—has been worked out by the National Labor Relations Board and Lodge 301 of the A. F. G. E.

The agreement states that "it is the policy of the board to fill new positions and vacancies by promotion from within the staff, with due consideration to seniority, efficiency and ability."

"Ability" is defined as covering "many personal qualities difficult to specify but important for such positions as secretaries and supervisory executives" but not covering "discriminatory choices based merely on personal preference, having no legitimate relationship to the needs of the job."

Notice of any position to be filled is to be posted on the board's bulletin board. Copies also are to be sent to those members of the regional staff who would be eligible for such a position.

Application for the positions must be made within seven days after the posting of notice. The promotions will then be made from the applicants in accordance with civil service regulations. Regional directors, trial and field examiners and attorneys are not covered in the agreement.

The promotion agreement was signed by J. Warren Madden and Edwin S. Smith on behalf of the board nad by George Wheeler, Irene Kitay and Rita M. Windhelm for the lodge. Either party may reopen or revoke the agreement on 30 day's notice.

Inspired by high hopes for the fall season the Social Security Board Glee Club will hold an organization meeting tonight at the Board building . . . At 8 o'clock tomorrow night the A. F. G. E. Lodge of Social Security will meet to discuss its new constitution.

Potato Chips.

If you are as fond of potato chips as we are you will be glad to know that Department of Agriculture scientists and home economics have discovered how to tell in advance what sort of potatoes will make the best chips.

The trick, it seems, is not the kind of potato used, but the temperature under which the potatoes are stored from the time they are taken out of the ground to the time they are neatly sliced, one-sixteenth of an inch thin.

The lower the storage temperature the more sugar accumulates in the potato and the poorer it becomes for chip purposes. The ideal temperature is around 60 degrees. At 50 degrees the chips won't taste bad, but they will be off-color. At 40 degrees and below, not even the best glass of beer will make them taste right.

It took the Bureau of Plant Industry scientists three years and from 40 to 50 bushels of potatoes to discover these vital facts about potato chips. The scientists, R. Claude Wright, Walter M. Peacock and Thomas M. Whiteman, were assisted by Mrs. Elizabeth F. Whiteman, of the home economics division, who supervised the cooking. The judging was done by different members of both divisions, selected more or less at random.

Besides potato chips, the group also experimented with the best storage temperatiures for other potato dishes. For French friends, it was discovered, a 60 degree storage temperature was ideal; for baked and boiled potatoes from 40 to 50 degrees. Below those temperatures the potatoes would be wiry, watery and off-color.

Peacock and Dr. B. C. Brunstetter have also worked out a color test for deciding whether potatoes or not potatoes are good for chip purposes. A slab of potato is cut and dipped in to a reagent. If the potato doesn't turn deep brown, it hasn't much sugar in it and is o. k. You might try the test some day on your potato dealer.

Accountants Exams.

Would-be accounting and auditing assistants have until September 8 to file applications for the Civil Service Examination in that field.

The examination is to consist of three parts, first a mental test, second, arithmetical computations and third questions and problems in elements of accounting.

To qualify, applicants must be under 53 and must have had either two years study at an accounting or business administration school, or two years of full-time paid experience in bookkeeping. The positions pay $1,800 yearly.

The Civil Service Commission has also announced examination for administrative officials of the Social Security Board, as stated in this column last Friday. September 14 is the deadline application date.

The wheat contract and clearance division section of the Three A's will hold its first annual picnic tomorrow night at Camp Simms, Congress Heights. The festivities, which will include a swimming tournament for men and women, a softball game between the Suspense and Claims Units, boxing matches and a dance, will start at 4:30 p. m.

Chairman of the picnic committee is Ben W. Barnett. Assisting him are William J. Heale, Barrett Knock, A. M. Buck, Lillian Jameson, Earl Kramer, Henry Reinert, R. C. Faulkner, Louis Annis, Gene Ayers, Charles Dean, Marion Fox and George Watts.

3 Plays Ready For Work Soon By Grace Moore

Back After European Tour, Screen Diva Finds New Stories Waiting.

Hollywood, Aug. 25.—The return of Grace Moore to Hollywood, following an extensive European vacation tour, discloses the fact that during her absence Columbia Studios have been far from idle regarding her screen future.

Three important stories now are being prepared for early filming with the popular operatic star at the head of strong supporting casts.

The first to enter production is tentatively titled "Interlude" and is scheduled to start before the cameras within three weeks. The story is based on an original from the pen of Robert Riskin, who has also prepared the screen play.

Author of Hits.

Robert Riskin is well known for his writing in affiliation with Frank Capra's direction of such successes as "It Happened One Night" and "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town," and the two have been most recently associated on Columbia's forthcoming picturization of the James Hilton best-seller novel, "Lost Horizon," starring Ronald Colman.

Director and cast assignments for "Interlude" have not yet been announced.

"Intermezzo" is another Grace Moore production being prepared for filming. It is based on an original story by Zoe Akins who is also credited with the adaptation for the screen.

Plans Banner Year.

The famous Rupert Hughes story, "A Nightingale Flies Home," is the third story announced by Columbia as a forthcoming Grace Moore picture. The story is in the preliminary adaptation stage at the moment.

Grace Moore's extended vacation, it is evident, hasn't impeded plans for her screen future. Columbia plans to make the production season of 1936-37 its banner year.

Broadway

By Ed Sullivan

Behind the Scenes

Perhaps because it often has been suggested that Darryl Zanuck makes only great men pictures . . . In recent weeks, he has inaugurated a campaign to dictate new femme stars . . . In "Road to Glory," a trailer calls attention to June Lang, a new screen personality . . . In "Girls' Dormitory," Simone Simon is launched with a similar fanfare . . . It seems to me that whoever suggested the idea to Zanuck is a bit "tetched in the haid" . . . The public is a great matchmaker, dislikes to be stampeded into decisions, prefers most of all to have the thrill of "discovering" a youngster, resents having decisions made for them . . . To name June Lang and Simone Simon as new stars, before the public has passed judgment, is foolish and hazardous because they have been "oversold" and thus saddled with a burden they shouldn't be asked to pick up.

DICK MERRILL.

If these two youngsters are rejected by the public, and it is entirely probable that they will be thumbed down, the recklessness of the Twentieth Century-Fox policy will clearly be illustrated . . . Public taste will accept no dictation.

• • • •

"You youngsters probably don't remember the horse cars we had in this town," said Sam H. Harris . . . The rest of us, sitting with him at a table in Dinty Moore's, murmured, politely but vaguely . . . "And here we are sitting with this young fellow, who's planning to fly to London and back again" . . . The veteran Harris nodded to Dick Merrill, who was scribbling on the back of an envelope . . . "Altogether, Mr. Harris, the load will be close to 13,000 pounds. The toughest part of it will be in getting the plane off the ground. We'll have to develop a ground speed of 110 miles an hour" . . . Harris shook his head in wonderment . . . "What will Richman do on the trip?" he asked . . . Merrill's features relaxed in a smile: "From the time we take off, he's going to 'It All Depends on You' to the motor" . . . "And if the motor quits?" asked Jack Kearns . . . "Did you ever throw an ace deuce in a dice game?" mildly queried Merrill.

• • • •

NOTES—Jack Kearns, former Dempsey manager, is rushing back to Chicago to beat Sir Stork's second landing at his house . . . Van Lingle Mungo, star Brooklyn pitcher, has made a hit with Joyce Lang, one of the Hollywoodivines . . . Curious that a Presidential candidate never visits his birthplace until his campaign publicity man suggests it.

• • • •

They'd been sitting around the theatrical office all day long, tall girls, short, fat and thin . . . Waiting to be interviewed for the George S. Kaufman-Edna Ferber show, "Stage Door" . . . They had sat for hours . . . Lillian Green overheard this terse morsel from a Hepburnish type sitting next to her: "They're looking for ingenues. Nuts! I'll be a character actress by the time I get out of here."

About The Showshops

THINGS you really ought to know by now:

The limited number of seats available to the general public for the world premiere and international press preview of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's picturization of Samuel Hopkins Adams' story of "The Gorgeous Hussy," at Loew's Palace Theater tomorrow night at 8:30, were snapped up in such short order, and the demand continues so great, that an extra Thursday midnight showing of the picture has been decided upon by the management. The premiere performance under the auspices of the White House Correspondents Association will begin at 8:30 and be over at approximately 10:30 p. m. The Palace then will be emptied and closed until 11:30 p. m., when the doors will reopen for the special midnight screening.

BELL.

• • • •

The acceptance list for the premiere at 8:30 continues to mount to imposing proportions. From the present outlook virtually the entire roster of the Capital's official, diplomatic, society and business "Who's Who" will be present to rub elbows, as the saying goes, with the sponsoring White House Correspondents and their families and personal guests. For a half-hour, beginning at 8:15, the lobby activities preceding the projection of the Joan Crawford vehicle will be broadcast over Station WJSV, with Mabelle Jennings presiding at one of the microphones, assisted by other notables of the air and such volunteer firemen as she may be able to enlist from among the crowd of celebrities in attendance—expected to include, by the way, Louis B. Mayer, production head of M-G-M, and Henry Mencken, the Sage of Catonsville.

• • • •

Two added attractions have been appended to the stage bill announced for the Earle Theater beginning Friday. Over and above Will Osborne and his new-fangled "slide music"—which sounds to me dangerously like a modern adaptation of the old familiar musical "slur"—there will be on hand Bob Hall, "that extemporaneous chap" who makes up rhymes out of his skull on topics suggested by the audience, and Ruthie Barnes, who shrinkingly bills herself as "the tops in taps." Miss Barnes will have to pick 'em up and lay 'em down with extraordinary expertness to live up to that billing following a week of Dale Winthrop of the Spitalny crew.

• • • •

Speaking of the current bill at the Earle, as we were by indirection, this is a little in the nature of an "old home week" on Thirteenth street. Martha Raye, with Bing Crosby in "Rhythm on the Range," on the screen, played the Earle two seasons ago as one of Benny Davis' proteges, and Bob Burns, opposite whom she is cast in the picture, headlined on the same rostrum last year. The Three Little Words, vocal harmonists with Phil Spitalny's "Hour of Charm" Orchestra, "broke in" on the big time at the Earle under a 13-week contract. And now look at them!

• • • •

The eagle-eyed Master Will Whitney, who checks up on such things for this department when this department doesn't check up on such things for itself, after bending a gander to it in Baltimore, reports that the show with which Col. James Jeremiah Lake will unlock his Gayety Theater, come Sabbath afternoon at 2:30, is ace burlesque. While Mr. Whitney refuses to write a review this far in advance, he does reveal—and reveal seems to be the word in this connection—that Hinda Wausau is in top form, as are also George Broadhurst and I. B. ("Elmer") Hamp, the comics. Coupled with the refurnished house, this show should launch the sagacious Colonel's season with the well-known "bang."

• • • •

Glen Echo Park, smashing attendance records right and left—if any are left to smash this late in August—will continue in full operation through Labor Day, Monday, September 7. The Crystal Pool, one of the handsomest in the country, is a life saver for the cliff dwellers in temperatures like these.

• • • •

The New Theater Group, intent on producing Irwin Shaw's play of "Bury the Dead" the latter part of September, announces that there are several male roles not yet cast. Any of the local Booths interesting in trying for a part will have an opportunity to demonstrate their capabilities tonight at 7:30 o'clock in Room 47, 810 F street northwest, when and where Director John Mann will receive enrollments and give auditions—or vice versa, as the case may be.

• • • •

About those season seat reservations at the National Theater, for which today marks the deadline for renewal, this year the reservations will be held only to the day prior to the performance for which they are assigned. Failure to pick up the seats two weeks in succession will be construed as a permanent cancellation. Phone or personal cancellation at the box office does not relieve the patron of his obligation to use the seats one week out of every two.

• • • •

Warner Brothers' picturization of Hervey Allen's marathon novel of "Anthony Adverse" will have its Washington inaugural on Friday, September 11, at the Earle Theater, under the regular house policy of continuous showings at popular prices: "Anthony," with Fredric March in the title role, is smashing records as a road show at the Cathay Circle Theater in Hollywood and, nearer by, at the Warner Brothers Theater in Atlantic City.

• • • •

Manager Stephen E. Cochran is all perked up by the National's bookings for the new season. With "Romeo and Juliet" opening September 6 and Maurice Evans following in "St. Helena" on September 28, he then has in black and white Clifton Webb and Helen Gahagan in "And Stars Remain," October 5; Ina Claire and Osgood Perkins in "End of Summer," October 12; Jane Cowl in "First Lady," October 19; two weeks only penciled in, then Noel Coward and Gertrude Lawrence in two weeks of repertoire in nine one-act plays, November 9 and 16, followed by such items as Katharine Cornell in Maxwell Anderson's "Wingless Victory," Katharine Hepburn in "Jane Eyre," the "Follies," "Dead End," the D'Oyly Carte Opera Co., "Boy Meets Girl," "On Your Toes," and the like. More on this topic later, I'm afraid.

Hope-Springs-Eternal Note.

Probably the best offer of the week occupied the marquee sign of a Midwest double-feature picture house recently, to wit:

"THEY MET IN A TAXI"
"YOU MAY BE NEXT"

Culbertson on Bridge

When one considers that catastrophic results of historic "bad guesses" in war, business, and marital ventures it is not to be wondered at, I suppose, that a bad guess at the bridge table may cost as many as four tricks on one hand. That is what happened on the hand below. I have used deliberately the term "bad guess" rather than "unlucky guess" because it seems to me that there was a distinct edge against the declarer's choice of plays.

South, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

NORTH

SOUTH
♠ A K 10 9 5 4 3
♥ K 7

♣ 6 3 2

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 spade	Pass	2 diamonds	Pass
2 spades	Pass	3 diamonds	Pass
3 spades	Pass	4 spades	Pass
Pass	Pass

West, realizing that his diamond king was in an extremely vulnerable position, decided that the best way to save it was to carry the attack to the enemy. Accordingly, he opened the seven of diamonds, and this bit of brilliance turned out to be the declarer's undoing.

In justice to South it must be admitted that he hesitated an appreciable length of time before determining on a line of play, finally putting up dummy's ace and then leading the queen through East, with the intention of ruffing if the king went up, or discarding a club if it did not. The latter ensuing, declarer discarded a club and, to his horror, saw West gobble up the trick with the king. West now not only led a club but, on the virtual assurance from declarer's play that East held the ace, took the precaution to lay down the club king, following this with a second club lead. East won and now, with three tricks already home, clinched the contract's defeat by playing his last diamond. At this point South was helpless to avoid losing another trick. If he ruffed with the king he would fell West's queen with the ace, but at the same time establish East's jack, whereas if he ruffed low West would overruff with the queen.

Quite obviously, if the declarer had taken a finesse on the first lead he would have made all 13 tricks. Now as to the reason why this finesse should have been taken in preference to declarer's actual line of play. It was hardly conceivable that West would have opened a doubleton diamond against North's powerful diamond bidding and, in fact, the declarer himself later admitted that he had figured the opening lead a singleton. But if it really had been a singleton the contract was as good as doomed. East would not be such a fool as to cover the queen with the king, and it would do South no earthly good to get rid of a club because West would ruff and promptly cash two club tricks. After that, unless there

Hollywood, Aug. 25.

For a look at our glamour ladies, to watch them hard at work manufacturing the glamour which will dazzle you on the screen, I give you glamour gal, Merle Oberon. She has returned to face the camera in flicker "Love on the Run." I noticed Merle, in fact studied her, and I want to tell you that Miss Oberon is in good shape. She has taken off weight, and should be able to go ten reels with the greatest of ease.

GRABLE.

• • • •

"Love on the Run" should be a rather pleasant bout for her, for Miss Oberon is playing love scene with her sparring partner, David Niven. They need no rehearsal for their love scene, and I don't believe that they will pull their punches in the clinches.

• • • •

Now for a quick glance at the younger edition of glamour, or what could be called "Glamour in Bloom." It is on the set of that cellegiate flicker "Pigskin Parade," where Johnny Downs, Betty Grable and the Yacht Club Boys are to work in a scene. The "Glamour in Bloom" is, of course, Betty Grable.

• • • •

She is young and peppy, and looks as if the games of "handies" and "knock, knock" were invented especially to amuse her. Grable wears a slick, satin evening gown, and has bright platinum blonde hair. And if she doesn't like what the campus kid wants in the line of glamour, college must have changed.

• • • •

Director David Butler isn't on the set yet, and Betty Grable is waiting to sing a love song. Betty is amusing the boys. She shouts: "Hey, where's that Butler. Say, is it too late to replace Butler?" I ask Betty why she still has platinum hair, because, I believe, when Jean Harlow relinquished it, it went out of fashion.

Betty answers: "I still wear mine. I want to be extinct."

Love Among the Jewel Snatchers

When Sophie Lang found herself on shipboard with Max Bernard and James Lawson, international jewel thieves, and a fabulous collection of gems, she decided it was time to match her wits against those of her masculine rivals. She matched them so completely that Mr. Lawson ups and marries the gal! Pictured above are Gertrude Michael, as Sophie, and Ray Millard, as Jimmie, at about the moment diamonds and rubies began to sink into the background of their consciousness. All this occurs in "The Return of Sophie Lang," opening on the Earle screen this Friday.

CHAPTER TWO.

Fight at the Tavern.

"She just wanted to have her fortune told," put in the proprietress, but Randolph waved aside the interruption, and turned again to Peggy.

"My carriage is outside," he said. "I can take you home."

"I'm not ready to go," said Peggy. "Besides, John Randolph, this is none of your business."

Randolph produced a small pistol from his pocket, as the woman who had admitted Peggy suppressed a cry.

"I will make it my business," he said grimly.

Peggy stared at him, and this time, unlike the occasion in the slave market, he was the one who exercised the stronger will-power. Slowly she moved to the doorway, and, giving him her arm, walked to the waiting carriage.

Prof. Sunderland, fortunately for himself, had been delayed in keeping his 3 o'clock appointment by the lure of a corner grog shop specializing in English ale. As he sat there exchanging gossip with his cousin, Cuthbert, one drink led to another, and it was with a sudden start that he discovered the time of day. He was about to settle his account and make off, when an unexpected sight caught his eyes. There was John Randolph's carriage going by, with Peggy and Senator Randolph sitting in attitudes of stiff formality in opposite corners.

"So that's it!" cried Cuthbert, noting the rapid change of expression on the other's face. "You told me you had an hengagement with a lydy, but you wouldn't say who." He shook his head. "Well, my fine Romeo, she ain't for the likes o' you."

The carriage was coming from the direction of McComb street, and Sunderland suspected what had transpired. He wiped his brow as he considered the dilemma that would have confronted him had he been more prompt. Then he quickly thought of a way to handle the situation from that point on.

Lying on her bed, on the verge of tears, Peggy became aware of a slight sound at the door. A note was being pushed underneath. Hurriedly she picked it up, to read the following message:

"My conscience as a gentleman did not permit me to keep the rendezvous. Marriage, my beloved, is the one tender proof of my affection. I will await you with a carriage in the black lane at eight tonight. Do not disappoint me."

During the hours that intervened before nightfall Peggy gave up all thought of responding to this secret message. But when 8 o'clock arrived she could not resist the temptation of turning back the curtains in her room and peering out. Sunderland, as he had promised, was waiting with his carriage in the outer lane. He caught sight of her and signaled that she should open the window.

"I'm sorry," Peggy called to him, when she had done so. "This is impossible."

"I must see you, if only for a second," begged Sunderland.

Servant to the Rescue.

Peggy hesitated. Then she decided that it might be a courteous thing to bid him good-by. At the lower stairs she hesitated again. No one was about—but of course it was safe!

"Peggy, come with me," breathed Sunderland, when she emerged. "You won't be sorry."

"Please!" she replied, pulling her hand away. "I must go right back."

"You won't go anywhere without me!" answered Sunderland, in a new and threatening tone.

Roughly he seized the girl, who in point of physical strength was no match for him. She was able to cry out only once, but it was enough to center the attention of Cree on what was happening. He had observed the waiting vehicle before, and now he lumbered out from the servants' lodge to see his mistress being dragged toward the lane. There was no time to spread the alarm. All he could do was rush at the intruder.

When Cree lunged at him Sunderland was forced to let go of Peggy. In fury he whipped out a knife, but his thrust miscarried. Cree wrapped his powerful arms about him, and pinioned him until the two men lost their balance. As they toppled over the knife dropped from Sunderland's hand. He fell directly on it and received a bleeding gash.

By now the commotion had aroused those within the inn. Andrew Jackson threw open his window, and Maj. O'Neale appeared with a lantern at the post-entrance. There was just time for Sunderland to make a bolt for his carriage, pick up the reins, and dash away into the night.

While those behind comforted Peggy and held a council of war to determine what should be done, Sunderland brooded revenge. He reached a grog shop in the central part of town and invented a quick lie for the benefit of the patrons. A dangerous black at the Franklin Inn had fallen on him treacherously and stabbed him. He showed his wound, still bleeding.

The professor became the center of sympathy. Late drinkers, nighttime marauders, and passing mechanics heard his tale and embellished it. Disgraceful. The Negro who had committed the assault must be captured. In a short time a spirit of mob frenzy had been aroused. Banding together, the mob marched on Franklin Inn.

Mob Spirit Aroused.

When the rioters reached the gate of the tavern, they found it barred. Someone produced a log for a battering-ram. Amid wild shouts they applied it. The gate splintered, and the mob poured in.

Peggy had been taken to her room, but when she heard the blood-curdling yells outside her first thought was for Cree's safety. He had defended her; now they were seeking him. Seeing the only weapon she could find, a fish-gig, she rushed to the slave quarters.

Andrew Jackson, his eyes like raging flames, rushed from the front door brandishing two guns. John Randolph was not far behind him, and most of the other lodgers at the inn, armed with sticks or whips, followed after.

By sheer weight of numbers the attackers hemmed in the defending unit. Jackson and Randolph were towers of strength, but they were only two against a maddened horde. Some of the would-be lynchers pulled Peggy out of the way and tried to beat down the locked door of the servants' building. Others picked up stones and began to throw them at the windows of the main building. There was no rescue force in prospect for the defenders, and it seemed likely they might be waging a losing batile.

(Tomorrow: The battle at the Inn continues to a startling finish. Peggy, when it is all over, decides to visit John Randolph and confide the real state of her feelings toward him.)

Judy Ellington Again Starring At the Lotus

By Chanticleer.

After several months' vacation, Judy Ellington has reutrned to the Lotus and a family reunion has nothing on the back stage celebrating. Bill Strickland and his music makers have been staying after school to make special arrangements and Al Norton has been deep in his book of nifties to see that the Lotus' sweetheart is set off this week in fitting style. After all, a three-month vacation is not to be sneezed at—and the fete ought to be of the gala type.

Headlining the floor show are Elaine and Barry, ballroom specialists; Moran Brothers, in fast tap and comedy, and Mickey O'Day, specialty acrobatic and high-kick artist.

Probably the youngest bartender in town is to be found at Brinkley's, down where the East (southeast) begins. And the strange part of it is that a very youthful mixologist does just as good a job as the graybeards. They come away from Brinkley's saying: "That was the best mint julep I ever had. It just doesn't seem right."

Impresario Matt Windsor, of the Club Volga Boatman Windsors, has just returned from another trip to New York—partly as a matter of vacation and partly in the interests of future talent for his Russian Roof and soon—for the Boatman itself. Two things about the Club Volga Boatman and Roof to keep in mind: Anna Sablukova, now singing nightly. And the free parking.

Royal food in a rural setting. That's Boulevard Farms, the new dine-and-dancery on the Memorial Highway, just below Alexandria. Al Shae and his orchestra are providing the tunes. The dance floor is spacious.

Lorraine Grady took the honors at the beauty contest at the Dude Ranch and now is to be known as "Miss Prince Georges County." And then she turned modest and simply refused to go to Ocean City to compete for the title of "Miss Maryland." It's going to be another birthday party at the Ranch soon, Friday to be exact; another of those big affairs honoring Host Milt Barrett. It's safe to say that all who attended last year will be the first to ask reservations this year.

Tck! Tck! The little ladies on the current La Paree bill went a bit temperamental a day or two ago and the customers waited six minutes while the gals dressed. After all, who wants to dress on days like these? The floor show this week presents the Sid Leonard Aristocrats of Rhythm, Two Sidettes, Boots Malone and Billy Polley—everything from antics on roller skates to Russian and Spanish dances.

That old proverb about the ill wind is working out at the Embassy Tap Room. In this case the wind comes from the cooling system. Who ever heard of anybody thinking ill of a cooling system these days?

These therapeutic baths (Turkish baths) are functioning at last 'way out at the Maryland Club Gardens. Carl, the masseur, has slept just three hours in the last 48—that's the way they took to his line when it finally was opened. He's just about ready for an assistant.

Some of the orchestra leaders about town are smiling on a young fellow named Joe Feldman, who has written a tune caled "Love Will Never Touch My Heart." Moe Baer, Bill Strickland and Milton Davis all say the boy has the makings of a topical tune composer.

Alberto Barreto has been engaged to do the murals for Ramon's for the coming season. Barreto's work is quite well known to many Washingtonians for he has decorated some of the homes of the leading citizens. For Ramon's he is using plenty of color. The Spanish Fiesta room is completed. He's now working on the bar room—the the Plaza de Torres.

When the Mayfair Cafe of All Nations is filled to capacity, A. G. Peterson sits behind his hugs desk and directs the activities of a veritable army of assistants. Eighty of them—including waiters, waitresses, bus boys, chefs, dishwashers, bartenders, hostesses, hat check girls, entertainers—and of course, a janitor or two. Trying to keep all the lights burning and the rent paid are poof! Just minor incidentals.

Formerly with Max Reinhardt for three seasons, Sanami and Michi, stars of stage and screen, are making their first appearance at the Shoreham Terrace. But they've been on view in the Capital before, so they are not strangers in Washington. They played a part in "Anything Goes," screen version, with Bing Crosby. They create their own dances. Agnes Knox, formerly of Earl Carroll's Sketch Book, now is in her second week at the Terrace. She also dances.

Another suburban spot not to miss these torrid days: Griffith Farms on the Marlboro pike, just beyond the District line. Frank McNey is host. Chicken and steak dinners, Hawaiian Serenaders, broad lawns and evening breezes.

Vanessi, former Ziegfeldite, and her partner, De Lima, are headlining the new Chester Doherty revue this week at the Cocoanut Grove. In addition to George Patten, the signing cadet, and other attractions, the grove promises a talent surprise tonight. All they'll say is—tall, slim and blond.

Doing a Bowes Each Week at Chevy Chase Lake

Peace Meeting Planned.

Buenos Aires, Aug. 25 (AP).—Uruguayan Chancellor Jose Espalter said today that he considers the general response to his proposed plan for American mediation in Spain warm enough to consider a preliminary meeting among the American diplomats at Buenos Aires. The meeting, he said, would consider the initial moves necessary for peaceful settlement of the Spanish civil war.

Convict Slain, 15 Others Shot In Prison Riot

By the Associated Press.

Milledgeville, Ga., Aug. 25.—State Penitentiary guards killed one convict and wounded 15 today in subduing a five-hour riot led by a former inmate of the Federal Government's Alcatraz Prison.

The guards let go with shotgun blasts at the yelling, stampeding convicts after Superintendent R. H. Lawrence failed in persuasive efforts to restore order in the sleeping quarters of the prison's 500 white convicts.

Lawrence attributed the trouble to "convicts who just wanted to get out" and named T. B. Burrus, recently returned from Alcatraz, the ringleader.

Lawrence said Charles Searing, also an escaped convict, returned several weeks ago after finishing a term at Folsom Prison, Calif., was a leader in the riot.

The disturbance started last night at 9 o'clock in the second-floor dormitory of the brick-and-stone building. Windows were battered with iron bed posts.

During Lawrence's repeated efforts to address the men a prisoner shouted: "We are going to tear down the building before daybreak."

The rioters freed fellow prisoners from shackles and fired mattresses stacked in the middle of the floor. Convicts who refrained from taking part in the disorder drenched the flames.

Finally, at 2 a. m., a concentrated attack started on the main dormitory door and Lawrence commanded his guards to fire.

W. E. McDaniel, serving four years from Atlanta for robbery, dropped mortally wounded. The 15 wounded, whose names were not disclosed, were peppered with birdshot and not hurt seriously.

On the Air Today

The listener who keeps his radio set percolating through the noon period already will have advance notice that the proprietor of this space is back in the local precincts. After many days of grand guest columns by the city's air luminaries, we can all settle down to the uncertain brand of radio reporting that was your fare before vacation.

A clew to this effect was broadcast at noon yesterday when Charlie Stofberg and I sizzled in front of The Post Building with the first of a new post-vacation series of "Curbstone Queries" programs. To get down to cases, the purpose in referring to street interviews is to call attention to a change in time. Heretofore, "Curbstone" has been aired at 12:15—and in the future the time will be 12 o'clock.

Hope you'll all be back with us for these intimate glimpses into what the passerby is thinking about. And don't forget that five $1 prizes are paid weekly for lists of questions submitted.

So much to talk about now that the fall season is within sight. For example, the new Fred Astaire series will be inaugurated September 8, but without Astaire!

Acting on his sponsor's suggestion, the dancing-singing star will not cut short his European vacation. In his absence (and for the premiere, of all things) Jack Benny and Mary Livingstone will headline a special variety show.

Benny is not due on the air for his fall opening until three weeks later. He has been delayed in beginning his own vacation due to complications in the production of "Swing Time," his new picture. And his boss feels he should have a full vacation before returning to his radio grind.

• • • •

The complete roster of "Show Boat" principles for this fall also has been announced. The final and most glittering addition is Helen Jepson, Metropolitan soprano, signed for regular weekly appearances. Among the new names to be featured this year are those of Honey Dean, blues singer; Sam Hearn, comedian; Ross Graham, bass-baritone—and Al Goodman and his orchestra. Lanny Ross will again head the production and a cast now numbering more than 100.

Guy Lombardo and his orchestra begin a half-hour weekly feature for Columbia Sunday afternoons, effective September 6. The full-hour Kate Smith variety show takes off September 17 (Thursdays); Eddie Cantor, Parkyarkarkas, Bobby Breen, Jimmy Wallington and Jacques Renard and his orchestra return for the fall and winter season on September 20 (Sundays).

• • • •

Details also have been released on the new Nelson Eddy show, to be heard weekly via Columbia on Sundays with Francia White, soprano, and Josef Pasternack's Orchestra. The first 16 weeks will originate in Hollywood; those to follow will originate in cities in which Eddy is appearing on tour.

• • • •

Then there's the return of Phil Baker, set for September 27. And a new series of serial dramatizations by Helen Hayes, to be ready September 28. The Hayes vehicle will be similar to last season's "The New Penny."

• • • •

Today's features:

Perfect A—Bureau of Standards will broadcast a perfect musical A in "Music Guild," WRC, 1:30. (The Bureau of Standards' musical A on 440 cycles, or 440 vibrations per second, is accepted by instrument manufacturers as the "perfect A" and guides manufacturers and musicians alike.)

Final Salzburg program—From Austrian Festival by short wave, WMAL, at 3:05.

History of dance music—Don Voorhees and orchestra trace development of dance tunes from "In Old New York" and "Alexander's Ragtime Band" to the present swing craze, including "Too Much Mustard," opening the jazz era, and the refined moments added by Whiteman through such orchestrations as "Whispering," in "Cavalcade," WJSV, at 7.

Gov. Alf M. Landon, from Buffalo, WMAL, at 8.

Colonel and Budd—In a typical burlesque, this time on "Uncle Tom's Cabin," in "Town Hall Tonight," WRC, at 8.

Kostelanetz returns to direct his orchestra, WJSV, at 8, emphasizing "Everybody Loves My Baby," "I'm an Old Cowhand" and "Long Ago and Far Away." Cast will wecome the maestro with an original composition.

Mr. and Mrs. King to Fly In Ruth Chatterton Derby

Woman Who Once Feared Planes Now Prefers Them to Auto; Flight to Start From Cleveland Saturday.

By Dudley Harmon.

Mrs. Benjamin King, who used to consider herself hopelessly ground-minded, but now feels safer in an airplane than in an automobile, will fly with her husband in the Ruth Chatterton Sportsman's Derby. The race takes place Saturday from Cleveland to Los Angeles. As far as she knows, Mrs. King is the only woman in Washington who will take off in the contest originated by the air-minded movie actress whose present Hollywood contract prevents her from flying for the cup and cash prize she donated.

"The only way to get over being nervous about flying is to fly," said Mrs. King yesterday when asked how the timid can become air-minded.

"Even Anne Morrow Lindbergh, in her book, 'North to the Orient,' confessed to slight qualms when she flew through her first fog. But she made herself go up again, with the result that she now accompanies her husband everywhere without a tremor."

Skillful navigation, rather than speed, is the basis on which the Chatterton trophy is awarded. The journey is divided into several hops, at cruising speed, and points are awarded at each station according to the time actually made as compared with the time the judges think you should have made. Competition is limited to non-professionals.

Mr. King, an engineer by profession and an aviator by avocation, received his license before the World War, when "those flying machines" were regarded with a mixture of bewildered awe and curiosity. He has been flying ever since with a private license, and his idea of an ideal Sunday afternoon is to hop from here to Baltimore or New York and back again. He has designed several airports, the largest of which is that at Chattanooga, Tenn.

Mrs. King has been accompanying him since 1928, when she made her first flight. This is their first attempt at the Chatterton Trophy. Mr. and Mrs. King will spend a month on the West Coast before returning to their apartment at the Westchester. Mrs. King is the sister of Mr. Edward Brown, who owns the Endless Caverns in Virginia.

Seoanes Home After Long Trip

Signal Officer of 3d Corps and His Wife Conclude 2,000-Mile Drive.

Col. Consuelo A. Seoane, signal officer of the Third Corps Area, and Mrs. Seoane have just returned to their home in Georgetown from a 2,000-mile motor trip.

They went first to the summer camp of Mrs. Seoane's cousin, Mrs. George L. Schermerhorn, at Lake Luserne, N. Y., and motored down through the White Mountains to the MacDowell camp at Peterborough, N. H. From there they went to the North Shore of Massachusetts, where they have spent the season several times in previous years and have many friends at Magnolia and Manchester. Mrs. Seoane called on Mrs. Jacob Leander Loose, of Washington and Kansas City, Mo., at her summer home there.

They went from Massachusetts to Newport, where they attended the tennis tournaments and enjoyed the swimming at Baileys Beach with many other Washingtonians, and Col. Seoane attended one of the sessions of the Naval War College. Throughout the resort country there was a spirit of gayety and much more entertaining than there has been in recent years, Mrs. Seoane observed, and, although New York shops were all displaying fall fashions, the colonists at Newport, in the Berkshires, and on the North Shore, were still proclaiming the summer season by their attire.

Mary Macatee To Wed Sept. 12

Miss Mary Macatee, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Henry Cook Macatee, has selected Saturday, September 12, as the date of her wedding to Mr. Kenneth Donaldson, son of Mr. Walter Donaldson, of this city. The ceremony will take place at the Church of the Pilgrims, in Washington.

Miss Macatee was presented to Washington society here several seasons ago. She is a graduate of Smith College and her fiance attended Lehigh University and George Washington University Law School.

Miss Dorothy Miles Picks Wedding Date

Miss Dorothy Miles, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Miles, has selected September 12 as the date for her wedding to Mr. Frank E. Blood, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. F. Blood, also of this city. The ceremony will be performed by the Rev. C. E. Lenski at Grace Lutheran Church at 4 o'clock with a reception following at the home of the bride's parents.

She will have her cousin, Mrs. Frank Daniel, as matron of honor, and her sister, Miss Ruth Miles, as her maid of honor.

Mr. Harold Blood, brother of the bridegroom, will act as his best man and the ushers will include Mr. Baxter Davis, r. Lloyd Eihler, of Baltimore; Mr. Gordon Blood, brother of the bridegroom, and Mr. Leonard King.

Both she and Mr. Blood are graduates of the University of Maryland, and Mr. Blood received his master's degree at the Iowa State Agricultural College in Ames. After a wedding trip he and his bride will make their home in New York City.

Packers Ready To Leave City

State Department Official Preparing to Leave for New Post.

The Assistant Chief of the Division of Eastern European Affairs of the State Department and Mrs. Earl L. Packer, are at present engaged in activity befitting their name. They are packing and have been for several weeks.

Sometime soon, perhaps within the next few days, they expect to receive notification of the new post to which Mr. Packer will be assigned. For several months they have known they would leave Washington for a diplomatic assignment abroad, but they are still waiting to hear where they are to go.

Mrs. Packer has been gradually sorting and assembling things; buying clothes of a kind she probably will need if the appointment takes them to a cool climate and wondering whether she should select more of them for weather such as Washington offers in the summer.

She has found time in the midst of all this to attend informal luncheons, teas and dinners with friends who are not yet saying farewell, but who are trying to see as much as possible of the Packers before they leave.

They will move this week-end from their home on Van Buren street to the home of Mr. Leo Pasvolsky, of Brookings Institution, and Mrs. Pasvolsky, who sail today for Europe. The Pasvolskys have just returned from a vacation in Peterborough, N. H., and left yesterday for New York to sail aboard the George Washington today. Mr. Pasvolsky, who is a noted economist, is to attend a conference in Geneva.

During the five weeks they are away, Mr. and Mrs. Packer and Mrs. Packer's brother, Mr. Louis Malone, will occupy their home on R street, and probably will leave the Capital about October 1.

Mrs. Graves Back in City

Mrs. Ralph Graves has returned to her home in Foxall Village from a trip of six weeks to New York State and Newport. In Newport she divided her time between the home of Commander and Mrs. Smith Hempstone and Capt. and Mrs. Harry Pence, all of whom at one time resided in Washington.

Mrs. Graves and Mrs. Hempstone, the daughter of Mr. Theodore Noyes, of this city, have designed a game for children which comes in the form of a doll's house. Mrs. Graves, who is an artist, designed the doll's house and Mrs. Hempstone wrote a short children's story to go with it.

Commander Hempstone is at present with the fleet on the West Coast, where he has been assigned to duty. Mrs. Hempstone and their children will join him there early in October.

Beth Thompson, Mrs. Hempstone's daughter, is another young socialite who is thinking of a career in the movies. She appeared in the movie recently filmed at Newport by local merchants, and photographed exceptionally well. The film had a plot and summer resi dents served as members of the cast. Miss Thompson has appeared on the stage with stock companies in Washington.

Mrs. Graves' brother, Capt. John Evans, and Mrs. Evans, who have been summering in Foxall Village, will leave Thursday for West Point, where the former has been stationed. Last year they were at Fort Meade.

Society Girls to Sell Cigarettes on Cruise

Chorus to Sing Operetta Songs on River Trip.

A group of society girls in nautical attire will be cigarette vendors tomorrow night, selling their wares to the guests aboard the steamer Potomac on the final Gold Cup Cruise. The event is for the President's Cup Regatta to be held next month.

Songs from the Gilbert and Sullivan operetta "H. M. S. Pinafore" will be sung by a chorus of 16 under the direction of Miss Estelle Wentworth. There will be dancing on the ship and other entertainment.

The cigarette girls will be the Misses Lillian Willett, Dorothy Gould Fowler, Beulah Rodgers, Fenella Castanedo, Patricia Ruth Helm, Marthena Williams and Mrs. Walter Watson.

Arrive Here From South America

Hessler Studio.

Lieut. Comdr. and Mme. Ramon Casanova with their two children, Maria Esther and Raquel. Lieut. Comdr. Casanova, newly appointed Air Commissioner attached to the Argentine Embassy, recently came to Washington with his family and they are making their home at the Wardman Park Hotel.

Miss Klooster Becomes Bride

The home of Prof. and Mrs. Harvey A. Morrison, in Takoma Park, was the scene of the wedding last night of Miss Roberta Jeanne Klooster, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Abel J. Klooster, of La Porte, Ind., and Mr. Franklin Wright Schneider, son of Mrs. Frosta Schneider, of Takoma Park. Prof. Morrison performed the ceremony at 8 o'clock in the presence of friends and relatives.

Palms and ferns were used with hydrangeas in the decorations. The flowers filled the fireplace, and the mantle was concealed by sprays of white clematis.

Miss Dorothy Bryan accompanied Miss Edythe Stephenson, who sang preceding the ceremony.

The bride wore a gown of white crepe, simply made with shirring forming a graceful neckline. Her short veil of meline was arranged in cap effect, held by a slender band of white velvet. She carried a shower bouquet of bride's roses with gypsophilia and fern.

Mrs. John Wilhelm, her matron of honor and only attendant, wore pale pink satin with a close bodice and long flaring skirt, and carried pink roses.

Mr. Lloyd Lindley Moore was best man.

A reception followed the wedding. The couple left for a motor trip through the Shenandoah Valley and will be at home to their friends after September 10, at Central Hall, Washington Missionary College, where both are students.

Washington, are now in New York Wellington, where they are visiting friends.

Mrs. William Proctor, of New York, was in charge of arrangements and three distinguished speakers, all well known in Washington, addressed the meeting. They were Senator Wallace H. White, of Maine; Mme. Julia Grant Cantacuzene, who is now the guest of Mrs. Anne Archbold, and former Attorney General Seth Richardson, who was a member of the Cabinet in the Coolidge and Hoover Administrations.

District Woman In Tennis Play

Mary Cootes Will Enter National Contest at Forest Hill.

Miss Mary Cootes, tennis champion of the District of Columbia, who has been traveling through the East, taking part in matches all summer, will enter the national tournament at Forest Hills, which starts September 2. She is the daughter of Col. and Mrs. Harry N. Cootes, of Alexandria, Va., and, with her mother, will return to her home there after the Forest Hill matches.

In a recent match at Manchester, Mass., Miss Cootes, discouraged by a slight drizzle and a soggy court, discarded shoes and socks and played barefoot. Her opponent was Gracyn Wheler, of Santa Moncia, seeded fifth in the national ranking. Although Miss Cootes lost the match, she held the round to three sets, and was several times at set point in one set.

Wife of Soviet Envoy Returns From the West

Mme. Troyanovsky and Son Will Leave Again for Bay Ridge.

Mme. Alexander A. Troyanovsky, wife of the Ambassador of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, accompanied by her son, Oleg, and Miss Lida Ivanova, of the embassy staff, arrived home yesterday morning from their trip West. They came from Wyoming by train following an accident to their car when it skidded into a ditch near Cheyenne. The automobile will be shipped home.

Mme. Troyanovsky and her son have both recovered from the slight injuries they received in the accident and are glad to be home again, despite the heat.

They drove to the Pacific Coast and visited the national parks before the accident to their car curtailed their trip.

The Ambassador, who has spent most of his week-ends at their summer home in Bay Ridge, came to the Capital to meet his wife and son, and they will accompany him back there to spend some time.

Capt. and Mrs. Lanham Entertain for Craigs

Capt. and Mrs. Charles T. Lanham entertained at dinner last night at the Shoreham in honor of Capt. Malin Craig, jr., son of the Chief of Staff and Mrs. Malin Craig, and his wife. Capt. and Mrs. Craig, who have been here as guests of his parents, leave Friday for West Point.

Other guests were Capt. and Mrs. George D. Crosby, Maj. and Mrs. Frances G. Bonham, Capt. John L. Whitelaw, of West Point, and Capt. George E. Lightcap.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Parker, of Richmond, are in Washington for a few days and are at the Shoreham.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

21-Year-Old Girl Who Says She Is So Lonely She Could Scream, Asks How to Overcome Timidity.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a girl 21 years of age. I came here last September to attend college, and am now working in a home to help finance my next year's work. My problem is lack of ability to make friends, especially men. My mother died when I was 4. A family of adults kept me until I was 15. Between the ages of 4 and 12, I had no friends of my own age to speak of. I had a private instructor and my pets and the grown folks.

• • • •

My relatives were rather jealous of me for family reasons and never hesitated to express themselves in front of me. I developed a supersensitive nature and many times my feelings were severely hurt by disparaging remarks about me. As time went on I dodged people more and more. By the time I was 7 or 8 years old, I simply disappeared when I saw anyone coming, regardless of who it was.

• • • •

I was so afraid of what people might think of me. I knew I wasn't beautiful and was painfully self-conscious of every little move I made. I grew up with this terrific inferiority complex. I still hate to meet people and yet I want to. I can just feel in my very bones that I'm different some way or other.

• • • •

It's only people who live with me for a couple of years who really learn to like me, and I can't live with everybody, so I'm just sunk. I am not good at making conversation and not being striking in appearance, nobody notices me in a group.

• • • •

Men seem to be absolutely unattainable so far as I am concerned. I haven't the first idea how to make a bid for their friendship. I have had a few boy friends who liked me a lot as the result of long acquaintanceship, but they just weren't my kind, and I wouldn't know how to interest a man I had just met.

• • • •

I have seen women much uglier than I am happily married, and here I can't even get a steady boy friend. I have always had imaginary friends until I met a young man down here whom I learned to like very much, but not finding me very interesting myself, he sort of quit coming around. Now I am so lonesome I could scream if I were that kind. Not even my imaginary friends help me much, although they are better than nothing . . . I have told everything just as it is, hoping you can help me, or tell me of a psychologist to go to, because I can't live in such a way any longer. HESTER M.

• • • •

Study Voice, Dancing.

DEAR HESTER M.: What you need primarily is poise of manner in meeting persons. These things can be obtained, I believe, by studying voice and dancing. Vocal culture stresses proper breathing which, in turn, has an amazingly beneficial effect on the nervous system, aside from investing the intelligent, indefatigable student with the charm of a properly pitched voice which enunciates words musically and distinctly. Dancing—and I do not mean ballroom dancing, but what is generally known as aesthetic dancing—will give you a knowledge of the fundamentals of physical grace.

• • • •

I recall having talked with a well-known dance teacher a few years ago. By conventional standards, she was certainly not pretty. But she was the sort of person who would have put a merely pretty, or even beautiful, woman completely in the shade. The manner in which she entered a room, in which she sank down into a chair, in which she rose from it, was pure poetry of motion. She was, by virtue of her physical co-ordination, impressively distingue.

• • • •

When you have once gotten control of your body and your voice, nobody will notice whether or not you are a fluent conversationalist. And when no one notices, and you have ceased to worry about that particular thing, you will probably be able to chat easily in any company.

• • • •

Swimming would be very good for you, too. It would give grace of line to your body, afford you an excellent means of relaxation and put you in sight and sound of other young people. Try to be an exceptionally good swimmer and a highly proficient diver. These things require concentration on technique which will be an incidental lesson in unselfconsciousness and give you mental and physical courage, both of which you need. The best cure for an inferiority complex is to learn to excel in some one thing; to do that one thing so well that others must concede and admire your superior accomplishment.

• • • •

You have probably been too introspective all your life, which is why I would recommend your taking another route out of your present difficulty than essaying the psychologist's or psychiatrist's or psychoanalysts way, which is to probe even deeper into the subconscious.

• • • •

The way to interest a man is to give him the undivided attention of your eye and mind when in his company. You may, of course, give this token to half a dozen, a dozen or possibly a score of men before it finally produces the desired effect on some one man—but it is still the trump card for a maid to play with a man.

• • • •

Stop thinking of yourself as an uninteresting sort of person. Stop thinking of yourself at all. Just do the best you can toward making yourself attractive, and then concentrate on making the other person feel how wonderful, interesting, kind, generous, able and intelligent he or she is. And don't ever fall back into your childhood practice of avoiding meetings with or introductions to persons. Throw all those imaginary friends of yours out the window and never let them in again. This thing of having imaginary associates is the hermit's way, and a very poor substitute for flesh and blood companionship. Better one person who is ever so little to your taste to talk with than a company of fairy princes who exist only in your imagination. M. H.

New Ways of Canning

CANNING VEGETABLES and pickles—what year-round standbys these are! Make them even more attractive by tricky ways of cutting.

Cut some of your carrots a la Julienne in long matchlike strips, using a vegetable cutter. Cut celery and red and green peppers same way. Slice a few carrots across, making "gold dollars." Heat carrots, celery and peppers with young green string beans. Pack hot in cans, placing a ring of "gold dollar" carrots around the can in the middle as in sketch. Use 10 pounds pressure in pressure cooker, for 60 minutes.

For a mild sweet mixed vegetable pickle make this pickling solution: 2½ cups mild vinegar, ½ cup sugar, 2 small bay leaves, ½ teaspoon whole cloves, grating of 1 lemon rind, 1 inch stick cinnamon. Boil together 20 minutes. Add cooked vegetables such as shredded carrots, bits of cauliflower, Brussels sprouts, string beans, sliced beets. Let cooked vegetables simmer in the pickling solution for 5 minutes, put in jar and seal.

Success in canning vegetables depends on timing. Too much cooking means flat, tasteless vegetables. Too little, danger of spoiling. Our 40-page booklet, "New Ways of Canning Fruits, Vegetables and Meats," gives you recipes and a handy, alphabetized chart for timing of cooking. Full details on preparation—hot pack, pressure cooker, used with glass jars, tin cans.

Send 25c for our booklet, New Ways of Canning Fruits, Vegetables and Meats, to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 19th St., N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and the name of booklet.

Directoire Fashion.

Paris (AP).—Styles prevalent during the years following the French revolution have made a dramatic entrance into Paris dressmakers' collections. All houses thus far have accented these directoire fashions, consisting of tailed jackets, with cutaway fronts, wide reverses and high turnover collars.

Velvet Coat for Evening Glamour and Blouse for Daytime Chic

By Ethel Ehlen.

The Post Fashion Editor.

VELVET, which appeared on the American fashion scene in the New York market openings, has been given added prestige by the recent presentations of Paris couturiers, who featured it as one of the leading fabrics for fall and winter. When fashion is formal, velvet is always in the spotlight. The Directoire and Edwardian influences, so strong in the mode this season, finds velvet an excellent medium of expression.

Velvet will be worn this season from dawn until midnight. It will appear in simple spectator sports frocks and in suit blouses for office and schoolroom; it will be featured in afternoon dresses and in formal evening gowns. Lyons panne and crush resistant velvets are fashioned into daytime and evening ensembles, also into smart accesories for silk and woolen frocks and suits.

Doubly Adaptable.

One reason for the popularity of velvet is that it is adaptable to both the pencil silhouette sponsored by Molyneux and the more complicated fashions inspired by eighteenth century influences. It is also one of the most softening and becoming fabrics to women.

As a background for jewelry, velvet heads the list of fall and winter fabrics. Jewelry by the way, will be worn in abundance, both real and simulated jewels. Decorative methods being employed to enliven dark velvet tones are glass buttons and glossy embroideries, particularly those showing Persian inspiration.

Fully 75 per cent of the velvets are black. Other colors sponsored by designers are dark, lovely in their subtle tones. Deep shades of rust, all of the wine colors, dark purplish blues, coronation red and blues, eggplant and prune shades, dark brown and numerous tones of green (eucalyptus almond, bottle, spruce), are the favored deep colors. For afternoon and dinner suits, fur of the same color as the velvet is a smart and popular trend.

Velvet Belts Shown.

Schiaparelli is showing velvet belts with many of her new frocks. Tunics, blouses, jackets and millinery of velvet, are rapidly becoming as a part of the style picture. Hip-length jackets of Lyons velvet basque-like in their lines, are worn with plain, tailored skirts. Reversing the order, there are velvet skirts with gay plaid woolen jackets. Hats and blouses of velvet from a chic contrast to woolen textures for suits.

Long-sleeved dinner frocks, formal evening dresses expoiting the new extreme decollete, and evening coats of long or finger-tip length, all fashioned of Lyons velvet were featured in the New York market showings.

Panne velvet is especially adaptible to millinery and lends itself ideally to the vagaries of this season's hat styles. Hostess gowns of the crush-resistant velvet, lavishly trimmed with fur or depending entirely on line for chic effect, often make use of period influences in their styling. Fancy velvets, such as pin-dotted and cross-barred patterns are high-fashion notes for formal daytime or evening frocks.

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Exercise and Vitality.

It is now popular to be physically fit. Most of us realize full well that good health is the result of our own efforts in protecting and developing the body.

There probably is a greater lack of physical activity among women than men. Observe almost any group of middle-aged ladies and note the number with snugly corseted abdomens. Muscles buried inches deep in fat mean sagging digestive organs, constipation, and the absorption of waste products.

We may think that because we breathe 16 to 18 times per minute that we are making use of the chest muscles. We may be deluding ourselves because much of the work of breathing is performed by the diaphragm—that huge, broad structure which separates the chest cavity from the abdomen. In order to strengthen the muscles of the thorax—to create a really proper lung capacity—we should breathe with the abdomen contracted, thus forcing the ribs to rise.

Along with a flat chest come rounded shoulders and a weak back. This means bad posture with its attendant ills. No one need try to become a Hercules, but the goal to be desired is a graceful carriage, guaranteed by a vigorous set of muscles that will hold the body in proper position, maintain the organs where they belong, and be capable of sustained effort if need arises.

For almost every one, regardless of age, a planned program is essential. The time required in minimal—10 to 15 minutes morning and evening in most instances—will be sufficient if some set formula of gymnastics is followed. Of course walking uses—gently and efficiently—more muscles than any other type of activity. The lackadaisical, leisurely walk may be reserved for those who have some physical weakness or for those cavalescing from illness. The average person should assume a determined, forceful stride as though he were going somewhere and expected to arrive. The chest should be thrown out and the abdomen retracted. This will aid chest expansion. The arms should swing 6 inches in front of and 6 inches behind the midline of the body. A 20-minute walk in the open air just before bedtime will sometimes bring insomnia sufferers to the point where they cannot get into bed fast enough.

Just because the physical capacity of woman is less than that of man does not mean that she should be a sheltered, cloistered, flabby creature. Someone has asked why housework is not exercise. Well, it isn't. Perhaps because it may be drudgery or because it is not out of doors. Surely bending and stooping a good part of the day are more fatiguing than strength producing. Furthermore, the multiplicity of details in the home, the care of children, lead far more often to physical and nervous breakdowns because there is no relief from the "insistent demands" made upon mother.

Etiquette Made Complex By Favorite Summer Foods

One Hostess Solves Problem of Corn on Cob by Removing It From Her Formal Dinner Menu.

By Margaret Wallace.

NOW is the season of fried chicken, watermelon, roasting ears, and the fruits and vegetables that are the traditional favorites on many Washington dinner tables and those of nearby Virginia and Maryland. With them also appear increased problems of table manners. Following are suggestions for the consumption of the more common summer foods:

Corn on the Cob: How to eat a roasting ear, dripping, as it must be to be good, with melted butter, at a formal dinner party has caused etiquette worries to many of the most self-possessed. One Washington hostess has eliminated corn on the cob from her formal dinner party menus. She maintains there is a polite, but no formal way of eating corn on the cob. It must be hot and it is difficult to eat it when it is held in just one hand. It is not proper to cut the corn from the cob at the table. The cobs should be placed on the sides of the dinner plate. Never on the bread-and-butter plate.

Chicken Etiquette.

Fried chicken: The meat should be cut from the bone with the knife while the piece of chicken is held firmly with the fork. Each small piece should be conveyed to the mouth by the fork as it is cut from the bone. It never is proper to pick up a piece of chicken in the fingers at the table. If the joy of eating a chicken leg from the bone is desired, it should be practiced in privacy or at a picnic, or when the family "raids" the ice box late at night.

Watermelon: The watermelon always is eaten with a fork. The seeds are removed with the fork first and then a small piece taken on the fork.

Cantaloupes: When these are served in halves, they are eaten with a spoon. The part in the center should be scooped out with the spoon in small portions. If necessary the half of cantaloupe can be held with the left hand to keep it from slipping about on the plate.

Lobsters: The meat is removed from the shells with the fork. It is permissible to hold a portion of the shell in the fingers to remove the meat conveniently.

Artichokes: Each leaf should be pulled off and the edible end dipped in sauce and then bitten off. The thistle-like part in the center, which is not good to eat, is scraped away with the knife and the heart inside of it is eaten with a fork, small pieces at a time.

Fingers Permitted.

Asparagus: If the asparagus is soft, it is eaten with a fork. If it is long and hard with soft tips it may be taken in the fingers. Many persons believe that it is more polite to remove the soft part with a fork even if the stalks are long and hard.

Club sandwich: Very small and compact club sandwiches—a very rare variety of course—may be taken up in the fingers. A double-decker, dripping with butter and sauce, should be cut through with a knife and fork.

Hearts of lettuce: Hearts of lettuce should be eaten with a fork unless they are very hard and the hostess has provided a knife. The hearts of lettuce can be cut in small portions with the knife.

Hot biscuits and muffins: They should be broken in half and buttered. Very small biscuits or muffins can be put together again after they are buttered.

Salads: All salads are eaten with a fork and cut with a fork if it is at all possible.

Olives: Are eaten in small bits, from the pits. It is never proper to take any kind of food in the mouth and then take it out again. Therefore, olive pits must not be taken in the mouth.

Celery: Celery is taken in the fingers and eaten by biting off portions. If salt is necessary, the celery should be held over the plate and the salt shaken or salt spoon used. It never is polite to dip the celery in the salt or take a portion of salt on the side of the plate or on the bread and butter plate. At a formal dinner salt never is used on celery.

Ice cream: It never is polite to eat only part of a spoonful of ice cream after it has been taken on the spoon. The entire portion on the spoon should be taken in the mouth at once.

Peas: Even when they are served in a side dish as they sometimes are in cafes, peas always should be eaten with a fork. Do not mash the peas. Do not attempt to stick the prongs of the fork in a pea or peas. Take them on the fork, just as any other fork food.

Masculine Touch Now Is Missing

New York, (AP).—The masculine note is at a minimum in fall boudoir fashions. In general they're more feminine than they've been for many seasons.

Little Marabou jackets which form a feathery frame for the shoulders are back in style, to slip over one's negligee for breakfast in bed. A convenient thing about them is that they can serve in a pinch as an evening jacket.

Brides' negligees this autumn are frothy with lace, and there are trailing satin house coats in white and blush pink. One of the most luxurious gowns on display is made of eggshell color velvet.

Fixing Lunch For Children Mother's Job

Appetizing Box Lunches More Difficult Than Home Meals

Mrs. Smith had always despised the recurring chore of putting up a school lunch for the children. When the oldest child was at last old enough to take over the task, Mrs. Smith relinquished it with a sigh of relief and from that day on never gave it another thought.

The children, however, did not thrive under the new dispensation. Mrs. Smith's luncheons had not been inspiring, but at least they had been nourishing.

Her daughter knew nothing about food values or balanced meals, and simply wrapped up whatever she could get together in ten minutes, with no thought of balancing starches, proteins and greens. Bread and butter, and cheese or meat, with an occasional hard-boiled egg, and perhaps an apple, were the rule.

If a child is to be trusted with the task of putting up the daily lunches, the mother or some older person with at least a rudimentary knowledge of food values must oversee the job at least until she is sure that the child is competent. Putting up appetizing and nourishing lunches is far more exacting than preparing a meal in the home. Better let the child get breakfast and attend to the lunches one's self.

Nothing is more distasteful to the palate than a badly prepared lunch-box. Meat sandwiches get a peculiar odor which permeates everything, unless they are separately wrapped. Bread becomes soggy and indigestible if the filling is too moist.

The only way to make school lunches appetizing is to make them dainty and varied—a daily surprise to the child. To do this is essentially a mother's function. For it requires imagination, knowledge of the child's tastes, and above all, knowledge of food values.

Much Tooth Decay Found in Children

Modern children display the same dislike for the dentist that their forebears did, judging from results of a recent survey conducted by the American Dental Association.

Between 87 and 99 per cent of all elementary school children in the United States have decayed teeth and are in need of treatment, according to the Associated Press report of the survey, which was made of 1,520,201 children in 26 States.

Based on questionnaires returned by more than 8,000 dentists, the survey showed the average number of dental defects varied from 1.5 to 7.4 and that Negro children had on an average fewer decayed teeth than white children.

Vegetables Now Plentiful For Varying One's Menu

Housewives Advised to Turn to Less Popular Kinds and Give Families Real Treat; Recipes Suggested for Their Preparation.

By Dorothea Duncan.

THIS MONTH a women has no one but herself to blame if her family complains of menu monotony. What if the price of meat is on the increase, if fresh seafood is not as plentiful as it should be in August, or if eggs are higher than usual? These are mild excuses for menus that lack originality and variety when Washington markets are offering such a wide range of perfect vegetables.

The woman who believes that her choice of vegetables is limited to peas, corn, potatoes, lima beans, tomatoes, green and wax beans, and carrots has either been neglecting her marketing trips altogether this past month or she has been afraid to indulge in any of the other vegetables available, because she does not know how to prepare them.

Cook Books Silent.

What would you do, for example, with a cucumber shaped squash-like vegetable called zuccini? You probably wouldn't buy it at all, because very few cook books tell how to prepare it. But if you knew that it had a delicate squash-like flavor, that it could be boiled without peeling, and served with a wedge of cheese inserted in a slit made in its side with a sharp knife, you would order several the first day you were introduced to them by your grocer.

And so it goes with many vegetables that look particularly uninteresting or difficult to prepare. Unless the grocer is also an excellent cook, and nine times out of ten he isn't, many of the more unusual vegetables never appear at our tables, because no one we know can suggest a way of preparing them to bring out their distinctive flavor.

Frequently a woman who tries a vegetable for the first time without definite cooking instructions spoils the flavor by over or undercooking, and is so thoroughly discouraged with its failure to click with her family that she never attempts to serve it again.

Almost every woman who prepares okra for the first time throws the vegetable away after it has been cooked unless she knows beforehand that the vegetable becomes slippery after cooking. Many women do not know, however, that if this slipperiness is objectionable the vegetable may be rolled in corn meal and fried to a golden brown in deep hot fat. This final preparation gives the okra a delicious crispness that it could not possibly attain through any other type of preparation and eliminates the slippery quality entirely.

Preparation Varied.

Varying the preparation of old favorites will also relieve menu monotony. Have you ever thought, for example, to serve cucumbers stewed or sauted, or cooked cucumber cups filled with creamed chicken instead of the usual sliced raw cucumbers with onions and vinegar or tomatoes and French dressing? Try any of the above-mentioned vegetables with a stuffing of rice, meat or fish and prepare for stuffing in the following manner: Wash and hollow out the peppers. Parboil or permit to stand in boiling water for about ten minutes. The onions, turnips and carrots should be cooked whole then cut and hollowed in cup shape. The thin-pointed part of the carrot should be kept for use in salads or stews. Tomatoes need no preliminary cooking. Cut off stem and hollow out. Season vegetable cups well before stuffing. Cover with buttered crumbs or grated cheese. These cups may be prepared and stored in refrigerator several hours until time to bake in the oven. Fifteen to 20 minutes should be allowed for baking.

Fried Summer Squash.

2 white or yellow squash
Egg and crumbs
Salt and pepper

The white button squash about four inches in diameter or the small yellow crook-neck squash are best when fried. Pare and cut the squash into thin slices, or do not pare, as desired, dip in seasoned crumbs, then in beaten egg, then in more crumbs, and fry in deep fat (395 degrees Fahrenheit) from four to five minutes. When the slices are brown, drain on soft paper. Serve on a platter or other flat dish.

The squash is also good when rolled in corn meal instead of crumbs.

Cucumber Saute.

Butter
Flour
Salt and pepper
Minced parsley or chives.

Pare and quarter the cucumbers and boil them, without any water, 10 three minutes. Drain; season with salt and pepper; roll in flour and saute in a little butter until tender. Sprinkle with parsley of chives just before the cooking is completed.

Baked Corn and Tomatoes.

2 cups cooked corn (canned or fresh)
2 cups tomatoes (canned or fresh)
1 teaspoon salt
Pepper
1 teaspoon sugar
1 cup fresh bread crumbs
3 tablespoons fat

Mix seasonings with the corn and tomatoes and pour all into a greased baking dish. Spread the crumbs over the top, dot with the fat, and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees-400 degrees Fahrenheit) for one-half hour. This is a satisfactory way of utilizing leftover corn or tomatoes.

BUTTERSCOTCH WAFFLE BREAD.

¾ cup milk, scalded
¼ cup sugar
5 tablespoons shortening
1 teaspoon salt
1 cake compressed yeast
¼ cup lukewarm water
1 egg, beaten
3½ cups general purpose flour
2 teaspoons cinnamon
2-3 cup brown sugar

Pour the scalded milk over the sugar, shortening, and salt. Cool to lukewarm. Soften the yeast in the warm water, add the beaten egg, mix thoroughly, and add to the lukewarm milk mixture. Then add half the flour and beat until smooth. Add the remaining flour and mix thoroughly. Place in a greased bowl, brush with melted butter and cover the bowl with waxed paper and a towel. Store in the refrigerator until needed. Divide the dough in half and roll each piece on a floured board to make two 8-inch squares. Cut each square into eight 1-inch strips and weave these to fit a greased baking pan (8 by 8 by 2 inches). Let rise until double in bulk, brush with melted butter, sprinkle with cinnamon and brown sugar, and dot with butter. Bake in a moderate oven (375 degrees F.) about 20 minutes. Makes two pans of bread.

Hamburger Leads For Quick Meals

When it is necessary to have a meal on short order, hamburgers are the first thought. If so, make those hamburgers the very best ones by preparing them in this way.

Hamburgers de Luxe.

1 pound finely ground beef
2 unbeaten eggs
1 tablespoon flour
4 tablespoons bacon drippings
1 tablespoon grated onion
1 teaspoon salt
Pepper
Cream or milk to moisten

Add flour to finely ground beef and mix thoroughly. Season with salt and pepper and grated onion. Add the eggs and enough cream or milk to make quite soft. Beat thoroughly—the longer the mixture is beaten the better it is. Place heaping teaspoons of meat in hot fat and fry until done.

Green Tomato Pickle Recipe Wins Contest

'Southern Homemade' Given by Mrs. Mae W. Fisher, Wilmington, N. C.

The five prize-winning recipes from the recent Post contest for pickle recipes have been included in a new bulletin of favorite pickle recipes compiled by Dorothea Duncan, Home Economics Editor of The Post. If the pickle recipe for which you have been looking does not appear among the prize-winning recipes today, write for a copy of the new bulletin. Your request should be sent with a stamp to Dorothea Duncan in care of The Washington Post.

Green Tomato Pickles (Sweet). "Southern Homemade."

1 peck green tomatoes
1 large or 1½ medium heads hard white cabbage (3-3½ pounds)
1 quart either white or yellow skin onions
1 pint table salt
8 tablespoons flour
4 or 5 tablespoons ground mustard
2 teaspoons tumeric
2 quarts vinegar
3 pounds light brown sugar
2 tablespoons each of cloves, allspice, white mustard seed and celery seed

Wash and prepare vegetables, cutting tomatoes and onions in thin slices; shred cabbage. Put all in one vessel and let stand overnight in just enough water to cover and salt. Next morning press or drain all salt water out and cover for a short time with fresh water. Drain off all water. (Colander may be used.) Put mixture on stove and add vinegar, brown sugar, cloves, ground allspice, and white mustard seed. Cook until tender; add the celery seed, then thicken and color with the flour, mustard and tumeric. Simmer gently, stirring to prevent flour from sticking, until thickened and then put in sterilized jars and seal.

The second prize of three dollars goes to Miss Pauline C. Waite, East Falls Church, Va. Her recipe follows:

Berwick Pickles.

300 little pickles
½ gallon cold vinegar
4 tablespoons dry mustard
4 tablespoons salt
4 tablespoons sugar
½ cup mixed pickle spices, including root of ginger.

Wash pickles thoroughly and cover with boiling water to which ¾ cup of salt has been added. Let stand overnight. In the morning dry off the pickles and place in layers in a crock. Mix together the vinegar, mustard, salt, sugar and spices and pour this mixture over the pickles. Set in a cool, dry place and each day add a handful of sugar until 3 pounds have been used.

First of the three $1 prizes goes to Miss Vivian Murphy, 2515 Thirteenth street northwest. Her recipe follows:

Spiced Celery.

4 cups chopped celery
6 medium sized ripe tomatoes, chopped
1 large red pepper, chopped
1½ cups sugar
1 cup vinegar
1½ teaspoons salt
1 teaspoon each mustard seed and celery seed
½ teaspoon each ground cloves and cinnamon

Mix all ingredients and boil for one hour. Seal in sterilized jars. Delicious with any kind of meat.

The second of the three $1 prizes is awarded Mrs. Eula Eliff, 6 Phillips avenue, Hyattsville, Md. Her recipe follows:

Sweet Pickled Carrots.

1½ pounds carrots
3 lemons
2 pounds sugar
½ cup almonds
1 cup vinegar
1 tablespoon broken stick cinnamon
1 teaspoon whole cloves

Parboil carrots until half tender; skin and put through meat chopper with lemons (discarding seeds). Make boiling sirup of sugar and vinegar, into which drop spices in a bag. Stir in carrots and lemons. Cook until thick. Remove spice bag. Add finely chopped almonds; pour into hot, sterilized jars and cover with melted paraffin while still warm.

The third of the three $1 prizes goes to Mrs. Edward M. Allen, 3102 Tenth road, Arlington, Va. Her recipe follows:

Stuffed Pickled Pears.

Cut 24 large perfect pears in halves and remove cores with a sharp knife or French vegetable scoop. Fill the cavities with a mixture of ginger root, pieces of cinnamon and a few cloves. Secure the halves together with toothpicks, or sticks of cinnamon.

Mix one quart of vinegar, one quart of any desired fruit juice, 7 pounds of sugar and a spice bag containing two ounces each of allspice and cinnamon, and one ounce each of cloves and mace. Boil the sirup for 45 minutes, remove spice bag and cook pears in sirup until they are tender. Remove pears to sterilized jars and cover with hot sirup. Let stand over night.

In the morning drain off the juice and boil it again until it forms a thick sirup, add the pears and bring to boiling point. Remove the pears to sterilized jars and fill to overflowing with the boiling sirup. Seal.

Jams and Jellies Subject of Contest

JAMS, jellies, preserves and real appetite appeal to winter breakfasts. They are delicious, too, when served with cottage or cream cheese and crackers for luncheon or with roasts or chops for dinner. So every far-seeing housewife is devoting as much time as she can spare from her regular duties this week to the preserving of the abundant supply of fresh fruits found in Washington's markets.

Because the subject of preserving and jelly-making is such a timely one this week, it has been chosen as the subject of the current Post recipe contest. All Post food page readers are invited to enter the contest. Remember, however, in submitting your favorite recipe for jelly, jam, preserves or conserve that only the ones made from fruits now in season—peaches, plums, pears, grapes, etc.—will be considered.

Cash awards will be offered for the five best recipes. The first prize is $5, the second $3, and the three remaining prizes, $1 each.

Send your recipes to Dorothea Duncan in care of The Washington Post. Be sure to mail your recipes in time to reach this office not later than Saturday morning.

Keech Says P.U.C. Will Protect Consumers in D. C. Change.

Possible return of control of the Washington Gas Light Co. to local investors and acquisition by the company of the Alexandria Gas Co. and the Washington Suburban Co. at Hyattsville, Md., were forecast yesterday as the Washington and Suburban companies signified its intention to place its holdings on the market.

The Washington & Suburban Companies, a Massachusetts common law trust, formally registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission a statement that its 109,196 shares of stock in the Washington Gas Light Co. will be offered for sale. This represents 83.99 per cent of the common stock.

While no explanation for the move accompanied the statement, it is understood to be necessitated by the Utilities Holding Co. act. Strict regulation by the Public Utilities Commission and enforcement of the LaFollette antimerger law also are credited with helping to bring about what appears to be a departure of foreign ownership of the local gas company.

Close Check.

Ever since the majority stock of the gas company was acquired by outside interests in 1929 the commission has kept unusually close check on the company's operations to prevent any diversion of profits beyond the normal stock dividend.

Sale of the 109,196 shares of Washington Gas Light Co. stock at this time is expected to mean a substantial loss to the stockholders in the Washington & Suburban Cos. The stock was purchased at $125 a share; the anticipated market price is now $77.

According to information received by the Public Utilities Commission the anticipated return from the sale will be $8,500,000. As the purchase price was $13,648,500, the loss is figured at $5,149,500.

The Washington & Suburban Cos., it is understood, hopes to sell the Alexandria and Hyattsville companies to the Washington company for approximately $1,500,000. Such a deal, however, would have to be approved by the Public Utilities Commission before it could become effective.

Richmond B. Keech, acting chairman of the commission, expressed the point of view of the utilities body thus:

"Our only interest in the present action is in the disposal of the stock. We naturally hope that the major portion of it will be acquired locally.

"Protect Consumers."

"Should the Washington Gas Light Co. seek to acquire the Alexandria and Hyattsville companies, we would be concerned in the purchase price as a protection to the consumers of the Washington company."

Keech explained that the sale of the 109,196 shares of W. G. L. C. stock would not affect the present schedule of consumer rates, as no additional profits are being paid by the local company to the Washington and suburban companies.

It is the understanding of the commission that returns from the sale of the Washington Gas Co. stock will be applied to paying off $6,500,000 in outstanding bonds and preferred stock.

In filing its statement with the Securities and Exchange Commission the Washington & Suburban Companies stated that it was informed that "all or part of the remaining 20,804 shares outstanding may be purchased and resold for stabilizing purposes."

The cost of registering the 109,196 shares, together with public accountant, fees, printing expenses, and the like, will be borne by the Washington & Suburban Companies and will be limited to $20,000, the statement sets forth.

Luncheon Tomorrow.

The regular luncheon of the Washington Cornell Club will be held tomorrow at 12:30 p. m. at the University Club, Fifteenth and I streets northwest.

Lodge Leaders Flout A. F. G. E. Heads' Charges

'Communism' Accusation by 4 Named in Recall Step Held Ridiculous.

Charges of communism raised by the four Washington members of the national executive council of the American Federation of Government Employes against the six so-called "New Deal" lodges, which are seeking their recall, brought sharp retorts last night from presidents of two of the "New Deal" lodges.

The accusation of "subversive actions at direct variance with the best interests of Government employes and their sworn obligation to uphold the Constitution" was contained in a joint statement sent out to all A. F. G. E. lodges by Cecil E. Custer, national treasurer, and Ira Y. Bain, Michael D. Schaefer and G. Carroll Dimond, vice presidents, the four council members whose recall is sought.

Arthur Stein, president of WPA Lodge, one of the accused groups, described the statement as "a red herring," while Mrs. Janet Gaines, president of the Resettlement Lodge, denounced the charges as "not only slanderous and abusive, but ridiculous." The four other A. F. G. E. units involved are Agriculture, Veterans' Administration, Beltsville and Labor Lodges.

The statement of the four council members, which was their first official reply to the recall proceedings initiated by the six "New Deal" lodges, contended that the recall movement was the action of the lodge presidents and not the members.

"For the most part these lodges are dominated by a very small majority whose attitude and actions are subversive and at direct variance with the best interests of Government employes and their sworn obligation as employes of the United States to uphold the Constitution," the statement read.

Ballou Returns From Vacation And Plunges Into School Work

Finds Many Applications for Vacancies; Sees Normal Increase.

Back from his annual four weeks' stay in Maine, Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of Washington's schools, plunged yesterday into the work that has accumulated on his desk in his absence.

"See that stack of papers over there?" and he turned in his swivel chair to indicate bundle after bundle of sheets of paper. "Applications for the positions to be filled this fall," he said.

He seemed concerned for fear some teachers who left town before vacancies were announced the last of June have not yet learned there are several openings.

"We want to give everyone a chance to apply and we'll try not to start the job of selecting until we feel all applications are in," said Ballou. "But," he added, "we do hope to fill the openings before school opens on the twenty-first of September."

The school system, the superintendent revealed, will start off this fall with 55 new teachers and librarians, six new clerks, and 18 custodians. The appropriations bill provided for that increase in personnel but, Ballou explained, many of those places have already been filled.

Several Positions Open.

Positions still open call for a principal at Central High School, assistant principal at Roosevelt High School (male), assistant principal at Woodrow Wilson High School (female), assistant principal at Anacostia Junior-Senior High School (female), assistant principal at Cardozo High School (female), a professor of natural science at Wilson Teachers College, three practice teachers at the same school and a practice teacher at Miner Teachers College.

In addition to the new teachers to be placed, four junior high schools will have new principals when the doors are opened for classes on September 21.

John P. Collins is leaving Langley to take charge of the new Anacostia Senior-Junior High. His place at Langley will be taken by Harry A. Baker, formery the principal at Taft. Mrs. Margaret R. Merritt will leave Deal to succeed Baker at Taft. Miss Bertie Backus, head of the former character education department, is to be principal at Deal.

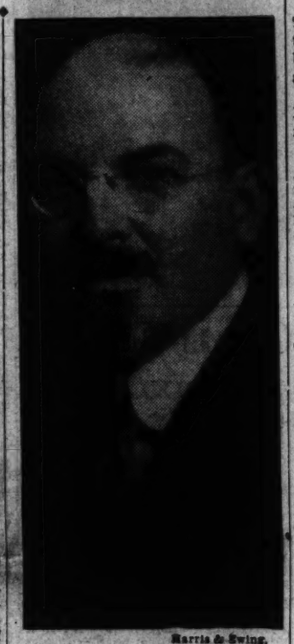
Although the superintendent would not venture a guess on the increase in the enrollment this year, he said:

"Well, you can be sure it will at least be up to normal. The first week's figures may go considerably above the first week a year ago because we're opening seven days later this fall. That gives families more time to get back to the city from their summer trips."

While the "normal increase" in enrollment will add from 2,000 to 3,000 new pupils, there will be only added accommodations for about 625 students.

Only One New Building.

The school year will start with only one new building, the Bundy School for colored pupils, and with only one new addition, the Elliott Junior High addition, which will have room for about 300 boys and girls. These two structures represent the smallest increase in building facilities within the last seven years, according to Jere T. Crane, assistant superintendent in charge of business affairs.



Harris & Swing.

DR. FRANK W. BALLOU.

Work on the second floor of the Hardy School may be completed, however, shortly after the opening of the term and the Anacostia Senior-Junior High school may be ready by January.

Plans are being drawn and construction work will soon begin on an addition, including an assembly-gymnasium at Lafayette School; a vocational school for girls to replace the present Dennison Building; additions to Paul and Dean junior highs; alterations at Eastern High; a gymnasium at Armstrong; eight-room additions and assembly-gymnasiums at Truesdel, Grinke and Young schools.

The congestion which has grown from year to year will be substantially reduced eventually if the Board of Education is granted the 40 per cent increase it has requested in appropriations for 1938.

Asked how the school system will meet its problems if the estimates are again cut, Dr. Ballou smiled and said:

"Let's not think about that yet. I prefer to be optimistic. Perhaps the Commissioners will give us everything we've asked for."

Peace Cross Traffic Relief Is Requested

Support for the move to relieve traffic congestion at the Peace Cross intersection of Washington boulevard and Defense highway was received today by the Washington Keystone Automobile Club in the form of a pledge of "100 per cent support and co-operation" from Vincent A. Emotional Upsets or Worries May Upset Eyes, Says Expert

Symptoms of disease in physically healthy eyes may be produced by emotional upsets or hidden worries and fears, Dr. Lewis H. Kraskin, of Washington, told leading optometrists yesterday at the fifteenth annual meeting of the American Academy of Optometry at the Blackstone Hotel in Chicago.

Dr. Kraskin urged complete utilization of the latest methods in psychology and psychotherapy to detect and dispel such symptoms. Serious eye difficulties, he said, are frequently encountered in persons who are emotionally sick.

In neurotic persons, Dr. Kraskin pointed out, the eyes are particularly sensitive and often reflect a hidden disturbance of the personality. Psychic disorders are personality disorders, he said, and may affect the vision in any way.

Two patients of Dr. Kraskin's he reported, experienced a partial loss of vision with no apparent physicial cause.

One of the patients was a young theological student who, according to Dr. Kraskin, was "working under great emotional strain, writing a thesis containing material repugnant to his intellectual integrity. Once the thesis was finished, Dr. Kraskin said, the man's eyes stopped troubling him.

In another instance, he related, a young girl experienced an intermittent blurring of her vision. It was eventually discovered that her eyes functioned properly most of the time, blurring only when a man whom she disliked visited her home. Her dislike of the man, Dr. Kraskin explained, caused her vision to fail so that she might not see him. Once she understood this, he said, the symptoms vanished.

Health Funds

the rest of the country, while among the preventable diseases in a number of instances death rates were among the highest in the country."

	(D. C. 1935)	(U. S., 1924)
Disease
Diphtheria	4.9	3.3
Epidemic meningitis	15.7	1.0
Pneumonia	127.3	79.4
Tuberculosis	102.2	56.6
Venereal disease	20.2	10.0

"Prevention Is Problem."

"The main problem in our local health service now lies in the field of preventable disease control," Dr. Ruhland added, "particularly tuberculosis, pneumonia, diphtheria, meningitis and the venereal diseases; also child welfare and all of its branches, and public health education."

The departmental request in the matter of health education is for a position of director at a salary of $3,200, with a stenographer.

Other new positions proposed in the administrative division are 8 sanitary and food inspectors at $1,800; 1 statistician, 2 stenographers, 2 clerks, and 2 chauffeurs. The total cost would be $30,320.

For the maintenance of dispensaries for the treatment of indigent persons the health officer has asked $59,500, or an increase of $14,120. This increase covers employment of 3 additional attending physicians, 1 bacteriologist, 3 clerk-stenographers and 1 caretaker.

The three physicians are asked for the tuberculosis clinic staff, while the bacteriologist would be assigned to make imediate examinations at the venereal disease clinic.

For the nursing service the budget is $149,501, as compared with a current appropriation of $120,400. Funds are asked for one assistant director, one supervisor, ten nurses and one statistical clerk. The total cost would be $25,420.

The estimate for hygiene and sanitation in the public schools is $104,220, as compared with $84,000 in the 1937 act. New positions requested are one assistant director, four medical inspectors, two dental operators, one physiotherapist aid and one dental hygienist. An item of $3,000 is listed for a new clinic.

School Needs.

Pointing out that the school enrollment has increased substantially in the last five years, Dr. Ruhland explained that there has been no increase in the school medical service since 1931. The addition of four medical inspectors, he said, will permit 12,000 more complete examinations.

An increase of $1,000 or a total of $8,000 is asked for enforcement of the food and drug act.

Attempting to set up a bureau of laboratories by consolidating the bacteriological, chemical and serological services of the health department, the health officer requested an appropriation of $40,755. This represents an actual increase of $11,333.

Fo child welfare and hygiene the departmental request is $30,840, as compared with $25,000 in 1937. This increase is asked to establish and equip an additional infant welfare station in the Northeast section, covering the Benning and Bladensburg era. The set-up includes two part-time physicians and one maid.

Library Asks Budget Boost Of $150,122

Construction Planned at Petworth and Conduit Road Branches.

An increase of $150,122 in appropriations for the Public Library, 27 per cent more than the 1937 item, is being sought by the board of trustees, the District Commissioners announced today.

The board asks $697,962 for 1938 for a variety of purposes including completion of the Petworth branch library, replacement of the Conduit road sub-branch, and purchase of a site for a new branch at Anacostia.

The trustees cited a 70 per cent increase in book circulation and a jump of 70 per cent in registered book borrowers since 1930 in justification of their request for a larger appropriation.

Construction estimates are $75,000 to complete the Petworth branch library, $27,500 for replacement of Conduit road sub-branch library, and $15,500 for purchase of a site and for drafting plans for a branch in Anacostia.

The trustees cited the increase in Washington's population during the last several years and point out that no staff increases, save for the Georgetown branch, have been granted since 1932.

For personnel needs the board requested $404,127, as against $352,020 or an increase of 14 per cent. Forty-seven additional employes are asked at a cost of $51,567.

Other proposals included in the estimates are that the central library remain open 72 hours a week instead of 64, as at present; an increase of $30,000 for books and periodicals to equip the Petworth branch, and $480 to restore rents for the Woodridge and Chevy Chase branches to levels prior to the economy acts.

6 Bids Submitted For Court Building

Keen competition for the job of constructing the Municipal Courts Building in Judiciary Square was evident late yesterday when six bids were opened by the District Engineer Department.

The Consolidated Engineering Co., of Baltimore, was the lowest general bidder, although alternate bids may change the line-up. Its bid was $1,237,700. The authorized cost of the building is $1,500,000.

Other bids were:

Man Finds Spouse Hurt By Gunshot in Bedroom

Mrs. Merle McKay Keene, 29, of the 4800 block of Forty-sixth street northwest, was in Georgetown Hospital last night, suffering from a gunshot wound in her left arm, police reported.

The woman, according to investigators, shot herself while in a bedroom of her home. She was found by her husband, Joseph C. Keene, who first took her to a private physician.

Horse Abuse Charged.

Richard Wayne, colored, of 1227 Thirty-fifth street northwest, Washington, was arrested yesterday by Montgomery County Policemen Charles Seek and Ira Hover on charges of cruelty to animals. Police said Wayne was working a badly injured and overworked horse on a terracing job on Glen road in Rockville. This is the second complaint made against Wayne for this charge, they said. He will be tried Friday morning in Rockville Police Court.

Girl Swimmer Tells of Saving 'Mystery Man'

SaidHeWas From Embassy, She Giggles, but Diplomat Denies It.

When ppretty, dark-eyed Frances Leyer, 18, pulled a drowning man out of Chesapeake Bay last Sunday he told her he was from the Polish embassy. His companion said he was, too.

"Imagine my embarrassment when they said that," giggled Frances yesterday. "When the one fellow came out to help me bring in the other I was so excited I called him 'Toots.'"

But Miss Leyer probably has no reason to be embarrassed at taking that slight familiarity. So far as the Polish embassy knows, none of its staff was even remotely in need of being rescued Sunday.

"A Great Mystification."

"It's all a great mystification," said Michael Budny, attache, and virtually the only member of the embassy staff in town these last couple of weeks.

"No one from the embassy was swimming in Chesapeake Bay on Sunday, I am almost positive," Budny declared yesterday.

He refrained from adding:

"It must have been two other fellows."

But whether the man she pulled out of the water was from the embassy or not, Miss Leyer has a rescue to her credit. She was swimming about 30 feet off shore at Selby-on-the Bay when she noticed a man who seemed to be in distress.

"There were lots of people, some of them men, who were closer to him than I was, but they seemed too stunned to do anything," explained Frances.

By the time she got to the drowning person he was going down for the last time and she had to dive to get hold of him. When she had him within a few feet of land another chap came alongside and helped her.

She Called Him "Toots."

She recalls that she said:

"Take hold of his arm, Toots. That's the way."

"With the help of artificial respiration the man who had come dangerously close to drowning was brought back to consciousness.

"They took him away in an automobile but not until he had thanked me and told me he was from the Polish Embassy," said Frances.

It was the first time she ever rescued anybody. Although she's been swimming about nine years she has never taken a course in life-saving.

Allen Orders Aids to Check Tax Returns

Personal Property Levy Evasions Problem; '36 Report Filed.

Tax Assessor Fred D. Allen yesterday disclosed simultaneously with the filing of his annual report with the District Commissioners that his agents are checking intangible tax returns of Washingtonians against income tax returns in the Internal Revenue Bureau.

If discrepancies are found, the taxpayers will be called upon by the tax assessor to explain them and to file correct statements with his office. Should the taxpayers refuse, court action will be resorted to, Allen said.

Predicting returns this year will exceed those of past years, Allen called attention to the increased publicity regarding legal requirements for the returns and to the provision of the 1935 revenue act which permits local assessors to inspect Federal income tax slips.

Evasions of the personal property tax law have constituted the most difficult problem of the tax assessor's office.

Allen proposed in his report that taxes on automobiles be increased by substitution of a motor vehicle weight or horsepower tax for the present personal property tax of $1.50 on $100 valuation.

He pointed out that the present method of taxation is unsatisfactory because a valuation book used by the industry is made the basis for valuations, rather than a first-hand inspection of each car.

"When it is considered about one-third of the cars in the District are paying no more than a nominal tax of $1 a car, by reason of their diminished value, it will be seen that the tax on this particular class of property is below the tax paid in other States.

"The average tax paid by automobile owners in other jurisdictions, including State taxes and other taxes incident to the operation of automobiles, is $34.46, whereas in the District the average tax is $14.86, this being the lowest tax in any jurisdiction in the country.

District auto owners during the last fiscal year paid a total of $518,476 in personal property taxes. This was $29,583.24 less than in the previous year. Allen said that this was due to the decrease in car values that followed the collapse of the NRA.

The total assessed valuation of real estate in the District during the last fiscal year was $1,131,798,384, Allen reported, and it was divided thus: Land, $483,016,100; improved, $648,782,284.

The volume of new buildings and additions constructed in the District during the last fiscal year amounted to $14,360,400, with the northwest section leading slightly.

Personal tax levies amounted to $2,065,713.35, representing an increase of $206,884.34 over the fiscal year 1935. The tax on tangible property increased $47,905.34, or to $1,021,801.04. The tax on intangible personal property was $2,104,767.26, which was $61,241.99 increase. The tax on public service corpoartions increased $97,462.07.

The 2-cent gasoline tax amounted to $2,352,595, or an increase of $211,515 over 1935.

Festival Tonight.

The summer festival at the Slyvan Theater, postponed last night, will be held tonight at 7:45. The program will open with music by the Washington Civic Orchestra, followed by presentation of a play, "A Game of Chess," by the dramatic organization of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and will close with a rendition of "Cavalleria Rusticana" by the Estelle Wentworth Opera Group.

Lanky, fuzzy-headed Johnny Fischer, of Cincinnati, member of the Walker Cup team, flashed back into the headlines yesterday by shooting a 137 to top the 160-odd of America's golf stars who survived the National Amateur qualifying trials held over the country.

With 36-hole tests conducted on 30 fronts, and more than 1,000 golfers participating, Fischer cut loose with a 67 and 70 in the trials at Brookline (Mass.) Country Club.

In the New York district, where a field of 206 competed for 31 places, Frankie Strafaci, 18-year-old Brooklyn Italian boy, 1935 National Public Links Championship, made good a boast by shooting two par-busting rounds of 69 for a 138. Strafaci showed up several Walker Cup stars, including Scotty Campbell, of Seattle, who had 144. Reynolds Smith, of Dallas, 145 and George Voigt, of New York, 151. Strafaci's 69 tied Bobby Jones' record for the West course at Mamaroneck.

Peacock Next With 140.

Another Walker Cup member, Harry Givan, of Seattle, failed to qualify at New York with his 159.

Roger Peacock, Washington, D. C., champion, had the next best score, a 140, fashioned in the trials at Columbia Country Club. Walter Emery, of Oklahoma City, National Amateur finalist, got in at Tulsa with his 142, and Clark Lea, jr., W. B. Tomlinson, jr., and Dave Ewell, jr., of Richmond. Bobby Reigel, favorite, failed to qualify.

Another big disappointment was Chuck Kocsis, of Detroit, National Intercollegiate champion, who failed to qualify at Detroit. Kocsis, low amateur scorer in the National Open, shot 83-78—161.

Brownell Second Here With 141; Peacock Sets Two Marks.

By Dave Herman.

Roger Peacock, District amateur champion, won the medal with a scorching, record-smashing total of 140, and seven other Washington golfers qualified for the National Amateur championship in yesterday's divisional trials at Columbia Country Club's course.

Odds-on-favorite, qualifier in three previous national championships, the 24-year-old Congressional Club star tied the competitive course mark with a 67 in the morning, and scored a 73 in the afternoon for the lowest 36-hole round in the history of the Middle Atlantic test.

Peacock also fell heir to the course record for 36 holes ,and was seven strokes better than the scores posted by Chandler Harper, of Portsmouth, and Ernie Caldwell, of Baltimore, in the qualifying trials at Columbia three years ago.

Brownell 2d With 141.

With Peacock showing the way with even par golf that was beautiful in every detail, 17-year-old Bobby Brownell, of Indian Spring, the District junior champion, surprised even his most ardent followers by finishing one shot behind the fast flying Congressional entry with brilliant rounds of 70 and 71.

The blonde little Brownell had a putt from 30 feet for a birdie and a tie with Peacock on the last hole, but he "babied" the putt, and his best was a par four. But it was a great job by the youngster who qualified for the classic for the first time.

Out on the course shooting his head off in an attempt to catch Peacock was Walter Greiner, 18-year-old Rodgers Forge (Baltimore) golfer, a semifinalist in the recent National Public Links Championship. Completely overlooked by the gallery, Greiner drilled out a 72 in the morning, turned in 34 in the afternoon, and stood on the thirty-fifth tee needing a birdie and par to tie the Washington star.

Greiner Shoots 142.

A five on the 240-yard seventeenth, where he missed his second shot after reaching the hill with a tremendous tee shot, blasted the determined young Baltimorean's chances, and he wound up with a 70 for a total of 142.

The other District golfers who made the grade in a record-busting field of 76 battling for 12 places follow:

Gene Pittman, of Kenwood, 73-72—145.

Volney Burnett, Indian Spring, 73-73—146.

Claude Rippy, East Potomac, 77-71—148.

Levi Yoder, Kenwood, 75-73—148.

Tommy Webb, jr., Washington, 76-75—151.

Forrest Thompson, Beaver Dam, 75-76—151.

Besides Greiner, three other out-of-town golfers qualified, two of them transfers.

Morton McCarthy, burly 200-pounder from Norfolk, was an easy qualifier with 74—71—145. Spencer Overton, of Rolling Road, scored

2 Lefts Made Villa Lay Down—Spoldi

'Point-of-Gun' Charges Fail as Chargee Hides Out.

By the United Press.

New York, Aug. 25 (U.P.).—Charges by Pancho Villa, New Bedford, Mass., that he was forced to take a "dive" at the point of a gun in a bout against Aldo Spoldi, New York, at Fort Hamilton last Friday were proved unfounded at today's meeting of the New York State Athletic Commission.

Lieut. Kilbourne Johnston, recreation director at Fort Hamilton, told the commission that two military police had been on duty in each boxer's corner during the bout and that Villa had been in plain view of the press and public throughout. Villa, summoned to appear, failed to attend the meeting. Spoldi appeared and was asked by Commissioner Bill Brown, "What did you give Villa to lay down?"

Spoldi replied:

"I gave him two lefts."

Marcey Tops D. C. Men at Vandalia

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Vandalia, Ohio, Aug. 25.—Julius Marcey's 184 was high among the Washington, D. C., contingent to the Grand American Trapshooting Tournament today, but still not good enough to figure in the prize distribution, as Mrs. Lela Hall, of Strasburg, Mo., and Joe Heistand, of Hillsboro, Onio, retained the American clay target championships each won a year ago.

Trailing Marcey were H. H. Shelton, 173; C. T. Fansett, 171, and Herbert M. Bingham, 154, none of whom figured importantly in the proceedings at any time.

Albert Suttle, of Petersburg, Va., turned in a card of 188, tying with E. E. Cuthbert, of Winchester, for the best score made by the squad from Virginia. A. M. Pullen, Richmond, shot a 179; A. J. Wright, Roanoke, 176; C. C. Vellines, Charlottesville, 174, and Ruth Cuthbert, Winchester, 176.

Abry Tops Marylanders.

Joan Abry, of Easton, was the best of the Marylanders competing, shattering 187 clay pigeons to rank near the top in her division, although not high enough to be a prize winner. Walter S. Wilson, of Woodside Park, broke 186 targets, and D. F. Beck, Havre De Grace, 183.

In retaining her title Mrs. Hall gave the greatest exhibition of "pressure" shooting the tournament has witnessed. While still on the traps with 50 targets to go, she saw a score of 195 out of 200 go up on the scoreboard for Mrs. Marie Grant, of Fort Dodge, Iowa. To win Mrs. Hall had to crack 48 of her remaining targets.

She missed two of the first 25, thereby imposing on herself the task of making 25 in a row in the face of a brisk wind and light drizzle.

Heistand tied at 199 out of 200 with Walter Beaver, of Berwyn, Pa.; C. C. Plummer, who came all the way from Flin Flon, Manitoba, and Hale C. Jones, of East Alton, Ill. But in the shoot-off the eventual winner cracked 75 consecutive targets to win with ease.

Chicago U. Pair Defeat Grant And Hall

By the Associated Press.

Brookline, Mass., Aug. 25.—Two University of Chicago undergraduates, Norbert Burgess and Norman Bickel, who share the "Big, Ten" Conference tennis titles, made their first serious bid for national recognition today by out-battling the experienced team of Bryan (Bitsy) Grant, of Atlanta, and Gil Hall, of Orange, N. J., for a 6—2, 4—6, 3—6, 6—0, 6—2 victory in a second-round men's national doubles match at Longwood.

Just how much the victory was worth to the Chicago collegians will not be determined until tomorrow, when they move against the defending champions, Wilmer Allison and Johnny Van Ryn, for a quarter-finals bracket.

Other Favorites Beaten.

That surprising upset, however, was matched in the women's tourney, when a pair of unranked Berkeley, Calif., girls, Marraget Osbourne and Gussie Raegener abruptly halted the march of the third seeded Dorothy May Sutton Bundy, daughter of two famous tennis parents of a quarter-century ago, and her Los Angeles townswoman, Dorothy Workman, 6—3, 6—3, in a second-rounder.

Another seeded team to fall during the second day's play was the top-ranking French blend of experience, skill and youth, Jacques Brugnon and Bernard Destremau, who surrendered to aggressive John McDiarmid, of Fort Worth, Tex., and Hal Surface, of Kansas City, 3—6, 6—2, 5—7, 6—3.

Allison and Van Ryn advanced with a 6—2, 2—6, 6—1, 6—4 decision over Charles Carr, Hollywood, Calif., and Eugene Smith, Berkeley, Calif., but the titlists' most threatening rivals, Budge and Mako, qualified for the third round in much more decisive fashion, a 6—0, 6—4, 6—0 victory over Arthur Hendrix of Lakeland, Fla., and Gardner Mulloy, of Miami.

Millers Annex League Crown In 1-0 Thriller

In a nine-inning thriller that would have put Frank Merriwell and his fictional feats to shame, the Miller Furniture Co. nine yesterday defeated the Heurich Brewers, 1-0, in the seventh and what proved to be deciding game of their Industrial League championship series and earned the right to a place in The Washington Post Association play-off.

Five thousand fans saw the inspired Millers, defeated seven times in the regular season by the Brewers, and last in the first-half series, climax their brilliant championship drive in a nerve-wracking fray that had more angles than ten geometrical problems.

It was a single by Pinch-hitter Russell Boyce, scoring Mike Sugrue from second base in the ninth inning, that won the game, but before he delivered the winning run at the plate, Sugrue had saved the game in the sixth inning. He took Art Zahn's looping fly over his shoulder on the dead run among the spectators in left center, whirled and whipped the ball to first base, catching "Fee" Collier off the bag for a double play.

The run he scored, incidentally, was the first the Millers made off Everett Russell, Heurich hurler, in 27 innings. Russell pitched the Beermen to their lone series victory.

In chalking up his victory, Carl (Dingle) Walker, the Miller pitcher, hurled the first shout-out of his life and finished the first complete game he has pitched this year.

Both team continually threatened, but brilliant fielding prevented any scoring until the ninth. Dick Wingate, in left field, and Huck Stahl, shortstop, contributed diving catches that choked off Miller runs in the earlier innings. In the eighth, it was Eddie Cinotti, Miller shortstop, who saved the day for his team, going far back of second base to spear Knight's drive with his gloved hand and turning it into a run-saving double play.

Giants Win, 6-5; Climax Drive For Lead

By the Associated Press.

Cincinnati, Aug. 25.—The wildest winning drive of the current baseball season carried the New York Giants into first place in the National League today as they opened their "crucial" Western invasion with a 6-to-5 victory over the Reds.

The victory, achieved only after the Reds had come from behind to tie the score with a four-run rally in the fifth, was the thirteenth straight for the Giants, the nineteenth in their last 20 stars and the thirty-third in the 38 games they have played in the surge that has carried them from fifth place to the league lead.

The defeat of the Cardinals in the first game of their double-header with Boston pushed the Giants to the top, breaking the deadlock that has existed since yesterday.

A smart move on the part of Manager Bill Terry paid dividends in the encounter. He put Hank Leiber, a righthand hitter, in the outfield in place of Jim Ripple, because the Reds started a left-handed pitcher, Bill Hallahan, and Leiber came through with a two-base hit that drove in the winning run in the seventh.

The Giants called on four pitchers, starting with Lefty Al Smith and winding up with Gabbo Gabler, before pulling out the victory. Hallahan gave way to Peaches Davis for for the Reds in the eighth, who was replaced in turn by Don Brennan for the last frame.

Cleveland Acclaims Jesse Owens

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Aug. 25.—Jesse Owens, a tired but happy youth, came home today from his brilliant Olympic conquests to the thunderous cheers of his fellow townspeople.

The 22-year-old Negro flash grinned broadly and waved a handkerchief incessantly as the automobile in which he rode moved through the streets flanked by thousands of admirers.

"Friends, I can't tell you how happy I am," said the record-breaking Ohio State University star at the public auditorium, where the formal reception was held. "This is the greatest reception I've ever seen. It makes me very proud to be a citizen of Cleveland.

"As you know, my gratest ambition for a long time was to make the American Olympic team and run for the United States at Berlin. I consider I was very fortunate to come through the way I did."

On the reception committee was Charles Riley, Jesse's coach and "discoverer" in Junior High School. Arriving at the hall, Riley said:

"This is the sort of thing I dreamed about when Jesse showed such marvelous talent as a boy. Words can't express my feelings—this show is tremendous."

Gov. Martin L. Davey, Mayor Harold H. Burton and other officials paid tribute to Owens' sensational athletic feats. Owens was presented with a $500 gold stop-watch with an engraved scroll carrying resolutions of the city council lauding his triumphs. Publicly subscribed funds purchased the watch.

Larry Snyder, track coach at Ohio State University, occupied a prominent place during the ceremonies.

In Cleveland's Negro district the welcome reached its noisiest peak. Hundreds of colored boys and girls, dressed in their "Sunday best," sat along the curbs. Many rooftops were crowded with enthusiastic greeters. The throng shouted and whistled as those "who knew him when" sighted the beaming Owens.

In the gaily decorated automobile with Owens rode his wife, Mrs. Ruth Solomon Owens; Mayor Burton, Tris Speaker, one of baseball's immortals, and Lieut. Gov. Harold G. Mosier.

A pelting hail and rain storm broke as the parade reached the heart of the city and the slow moving procession became a "home stretch dash." Sirens screeching, the police motorcycle escort cleared a path in and out of safety zones and around street cars to the city's auditorium.

There the crowd, estimated by police at 4,000 persons, heard the athlete say: "You say Cleveland is proud of me. I'll turn the tables and say with sincerity that I'm very proud of Cleveland."

Newsom Ends Cleveland's Jinx, 5-3

Hurler Yields Six Hits as Lee Is Pounded for 11 Safeties.

By Shirley Povich.
Sports Editor of The Post.

For two-thirds of an inning yesterday the Cleveland Indians' jinx over Buck Newsom was working with all its historic havoc—but only for two-thirds of an inning. By that time the Indians had half of the six hits they were to make against Newsom and all of their three runs.

In those last eight innings the team that had beaten Newsom in ten of his 11 starts against 'em didn't get a man to third base, and only two to second base. The big pitcher was superb as he ushered the Nats into a 5-to-3 victory.

The effects were very salubrious as far as Washington's standing in the league's vital statistics are concerned. It reduced to one mere game the margin by which the White Sox now hold fourth place and elevated the Nats to within four and one-half games of the second-place Cleveland club.

Kuhel Wins Game.

That 3-0 lead the Indians acquired in the first inning began to evaporate in the second inning under the Nats' eleven-hit counter assault against the left-handed Thornton Lee. They picked up a run in the second inning, tied the score in the third and won the ball game in the fourth when Joe Kuhel rapped a base-clearing double into rightfield.

For a fleeting moment in the sixth inning, the Indians had the two tying runs on base, but not for long. After Newsom had walked Vosmik with two out, Knickerbocker produced a single into rightfield, whereupon Carl Reynolds produced perhaps the greatest throw he ever made in his big league career.

Gathering in Knickerbocker's hit in deep right, Reynolds unlossed a herculean heave to third base that Buddy Lewis caught on the fly and Vosmik was out trying to advance from first as the Indians' last stand ended unhappily for the Indians.

Gets Bad Start.

At the outset of the proceedings there was no evidence that Newsom was not about to have his ears pinned back by his old tormentors. He launched the game by walking Hughes and with one out he pitched a single to Averill that tore through Travis' glove on the fly. Then he pitched a double to Trosky that scored one run and a single to Weatherly that scored another.

Trosky scored from third while Sullivan was hitting into a force-play but that was the beginning of Newsom's reformation.

For the next three innings they didn't get a hit off big Buck. Hughes broke the spell with a fluke double that took a freak hop past the fuzzy chin of Cecil Travis in the fifth. Knickerbocker singled in the sixth and Weatherly singled in the ninth for the only other Cleveland hits.

Newsom himself helped the Nats to get a run back in the second when he followed Travis' single to left with a single over second base. Ben Chapman's single to left brought Travis home, and in the second the Nats tied it at 3-3.

The left-handed brigade of Lewis, Kuhel and Stone rapped out consecutive singles to drive one run across the plate and Kuhel scored from third with the tying run when Sullivan dropped Trosky's throw to the plate on Travis' grounder.

All of a sudden the Nats won the ball game in the fourth. Two were out when Chapman singled to left and Lewis drew a walk. Joe Kuhel, who had been making only singles all afternoon, rocketed a double past Trosky, Chapman and Lewis scoring, and with Newsom out there full of fire and brimstone, the ball game belonged to the Nats.

Wants Out-of-Town Game.

The Kendrick Beer Club, of Alexandria, who have hung up 15 wins out of 22 starts, would like to book an out-of-town game with some strong semi-pro team. Communicate with John Travers, 119 Summer Drive, Alexandria, or phone Alex. 510.

Paul Dean Put On Voluntary Retirement List

PAUL "DAFFY" DEAN.

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, Aug. 25.—Paul Dean, St. Louis Cardinal pitcher, was placed on the voluntary retirement list by the St. Louis Cardinals tonight. His application to be removed from the active list was mailed to Ford Frick, president of the National League, the Cardinal office said.

The younger of the famous brothers, who has been out most of the season with a sore arm, made his first appearance on the mound since July 4 against the Pittsburgh Pirates yesterday and was batted out in the fourth inning.

Henry Harold (Cotton) Pippen, 24-year-old Sacramento pitcher recalled to the Cards on option, arrived by airplane tonight and will be in uniform tomorrow.

New York, Aug. 25.—The Yankees went to town against St. Louis Browns pitching today, and, with Jo DiMaggia leading the parade with a homer, double and three singles, smashed out a 13-to-1 victory.

Lefty Gomez, returning to winning form for the first time since July 4, limited the Brownies to three hits for the seven innings he worked. Johnny Murphy stopped St. Louis with one safety in the last two frames.

Bees Trample Cards, 20-3 And 5-4

St. Louis Knocked Out of Lead as Boston Scores 11 in 1st.

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, Aug. 25.—The Cardinals were blasted a game and a half out of the National League lead today as the Boston Bees belted them over in both ends of a doubleheader, 20 to 3 and 5 to 4.

A riot of 25 base hits, including seven doubles in the first inning for a new major league record, gave the Bees the opener. They put the game on ice with an 11-run assault in the opening frame.

In the nightcap, Dizzy Dean, weakened by a recent illness, was forced to retire after the eighth inning with the score tied, and the Bees promptly sewed up the game by pushing over a run on his relief, Si Johnson.

Be it said for the Cards, they were forced to field a crippled team. Frankie Frisch and Pepper Martin were on the sidelines with injuries at the start, and Terry Moore joined them there during the first game when he hurt his ankle. Dean was not up to his usual form, since he left his sickbed only yesterday.

The double defeat, suffered while the New York Giants were winning their game in Cincinnati, dropped the Gas House Gang out of the league lead for the first time since August 10, when they took it over from the Cubs.

Staked to the 11-run lead in the first inning of the opener, Tiny Chaplin had little trouble going the route for the Bees in the first game, although he was touched for 11 hits. In the nightcap, Johnny Lanning held the Cards to eight hits, two of them homers by Rip Collins and Ducky Medwick. Gene Moore hit a four-bagger for the Bees in the eighth inning.

In the nightcap, a two-run rally of Dean in the eighth enabled the Bees to come from behind and tie it up. Then, with two out in the ninth, Moore singled, stole second and scored the winning run on Jordan's base hit.

Sprinting over a narrow strip of hot cinders that is the Central High School running track while a merciless sun did its best to fry the vegetation, a sweaty and plucky team of Georgetown Playground trackmen came through with a smashing triumph in the annual "Little Olympics," the city-wide track meet that climaxes District Playground activities each summer. More than 2,500 boys competed.

In second place and with lungs at the bursting point in a desperately successful effort to stave off Rosedale's determined bid was Sherwood, defending champion and one of the heavy pre-game favorites. Both Sherwood and Rosedale fought the eventual winners right down to the final event with all the speed and brawn of their suntanned muscular frames, but the boys from over the creek were not to be denied. The winning team was coached by Herman Riley and Paul Cassasa.

Two Records Broken.

Opening with a parade of contestants, followed by the pronouncement of the "Olympic" oath, recited by Meyer Sarrots, of Sherwood, selected as the typical playground athlete, the games were conducted in true Olympic fashion. The winners of each event, together with runners-up and boys who finished third even, mounted a rostrum to acknowledge the plaudits of the spectators, just as was done in the Olympics.

The games produced two new records, a new 60-meters mark in the 100-pounds division, and a new 400-meters relay in the unlimited class. Several other performances bordered on new records but just failed.

Georgetown won by virtue of its victories in the 200-meter relay,

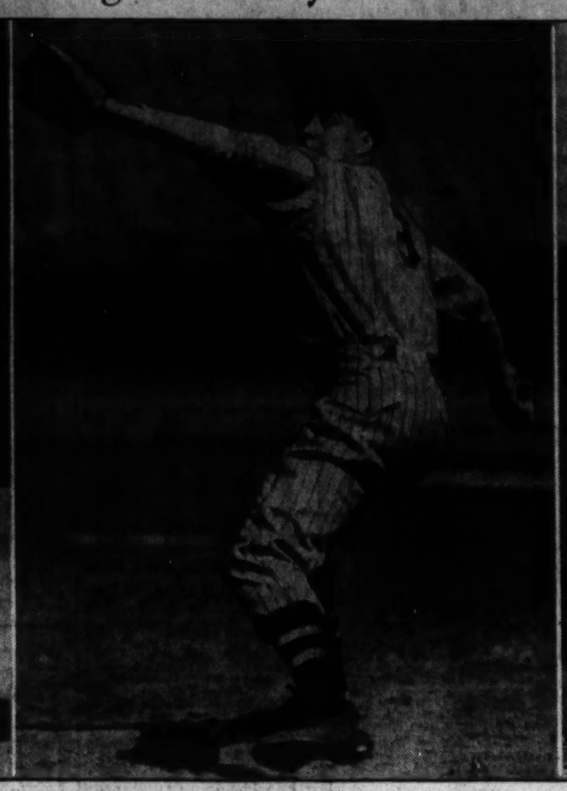
Str-r-r-ike Three! Cleveland's 17-Year-Old Strikeout King of the Majors Pictured in Action

Associated Press Photos.

Feller's fast-ball grip. Note only two fingers across the stitches of the ball and the thumb held loosely to reduce friction.

Bob Feller at the finish of his delivery which struck out 15 Browns and set a new season record in the majors.



Young Feller mid-way through his heave. Note the manner in which he rears back to accumulate power for the pitch which is acclaimed the fastest in the big leagues.

Feller stands with his feet slightly crossed at the start of wind-up for his over-hand ball.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

If there is any secret to the amazing speed with which Bob Feller turns a baseball loose, then young Feller doesn't know it.

Baseball's new pitching sensation who arrived in Washington yesterday with the Cleveland Indians to find himself something of a curio, broke down and confessed that he couldn't explain his 15 strikeouts against the Browns last Sunday.

POVICH.

"I just reared back and let it go," said the 17-year-old Feller after obliging newsreel men and still cameramen in a half-hour demonstration of his pitching form.

The beardless youth who in his first start in the big leagues struck out as many batters as Walter Johnson was ever able to strike out in the prime of his 20-year pitching career, is just a bit bewildered by his sudden fame.

And well he might be. Six weeks ago he was a candy butcher in the grandstands of the Cleveland park, daring not to hope that some day he'd wear a big league uniform. He had pitched a little, had been pitching for three years, in fact, with various sandlot teams in Iowa and Cleveland, but organized baseball was another world to him.

Out in an Meter, Iowa, he used to play pitch and catch with his dad, a former semipro player, and when he got a chance to play with a kid team he started out as a shortstop. But first basemen used to complain about the way he hammered the ball across the diamond into their mitts and to keep peace on the team he turned pitcher.

He was a pretty good pitcher, too—good enough to pitch his team into the national semipro tournament last season at Dayton, Ohio, where he struck out 18 in a night game and gained the attention of C. C. Slapnicka, Cleveland scout. Cleveland signed him to one of their New Orleans farm contracts, brought him to the Cleveland lots, and gave him a job selling peanuts and candy during this summer.

As part of the show during an exhibition game with the Cardinals last July 7, they called him out of the stands, gave him a uniform and let him pitch for three innings. You know what happened—how he struck out eight Cardinals in those three innings and found his name in screaming headlines.

Even then Cleveland club officials did not permit themselves to elate too much. In fact, Feller wasn't even invited to take the Eastern trip with the team the next day. Then changing his mind a week later, Manager Steve O'Neill sent for the lad.

He found his way into his first regular ball game at Griffith Stadium a few days later when he went in with the bases full, hit one batter to force a run across and then escaped with only one-run damage by striking out Buddy Lewis and making Joe Kuhel pop up.

He had pitched a couple of other relief ships before O'Neill consented to start him at Cleveland against the Browns last Sunday. But there was no intimation that he would even win his game, to say nothing of bettering the season's strike-out mark of 12, held by Buck Newsom, by three strikeouts.

But things began to happen immediately. St. Louis hitters moved up and away from the plate with great regularity, swinging and missing third strikes. He struck out at least one hitter in every inning but the eighth. Twice he retired the side on strikeouts. By the end of the seventh inning he had struck out 14, an average of two per inning.

They weren't standing there taking called strikes either. Umpire Harry Geisel, who worked the game behind the plate, reported here yesterday that only two of Feller's 15 strikeouts were called third strikes.

And Feller was working, too, with a rookie catcher as his battery mate, Behind the bat was young Charley George who was catching the second game of his life in the big leagues.

The consistency with which young Feller was striking 'em out finally began to wear on the nerves of the Browns. Anyway, in the ninth, when Ed Coleman was sent in to pinch hit for St. Louis, he approached the plate warily.

"I s-ss-say, H-h-harry," Coleman stammered to Geisel, "Is-ss he r-re-al-l-ly f-f-fast?"

Geisel agreed the young Feller was fast and after the game he ended all dispute about the lively ball.

"I saw the lively ball that day," said Geisel. "I never saw a ball come up to the plate any more lively than those balls that kid was chucking up there."

He's got control, too, apparently. Last month at Cleveland when the Yankees and Indians staged a pre-game field day, they set up a small hoop at which pitchers of both teams aimed in an exhibition of control. In five throws young Feller threw five bull's-eyes. The nearest any other pitcher came to that record was three bull'seyes by Mel Harder.

Cronin, Sighing for Old Days With Nats, Learns to Be Tough

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Boston, Mass., Aug. 25.—Manager Joe Cronin of the Red Sox indirectly paid high tribute today to the personnel of the Washington baseball teams he managed before he was purchased by the Yawkey millions to guide the destinies of Yawkey's pennant failures of 1936.

"I have learned plenty about ball players these past two years," said the young manager. "You see, I really grew up with the Washington club and I was one of the players. When I was appointed manager the men with me were for the most part men with whom I'd played for years.

"I knew all about them, and they knew all about me. They seemed to be tickled to death that I was being given my chance and I had all the co-operation in the world. They were out there hustling all the time and so we did pretty well. When I was bought by the Red Sox I naturally thought that the same practice would work here. I'd be one of the players and would not act the manager. But these weren't fellows who grew up with me and I finally found out that kindliness isn't always the cure."

Rowe's Two-Hit Game Blanks Bosox, 5-0

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Aug. 25.—Schoolboy Rowe, of Detroit, pitched a two-hit game today to shut out the Boston Red Sox, 5 to 0, in the first game of the series.

No Boston player got beyond first base and only two went as far as that, Cramer in the fourth inning and Cronin in the fifth.

Bluefish Hogged By Illegal Netters As Anglers Watch

By Jack Hawley.

A big run of large bluefish arrived on the S. W. Middles today, and they were biting, but the afternoon was an enraging loss to local anglers who were just starting to enjoy the sport.

With no interference whatsoever from the Maryland Fish Conservation Commission, four boats of illegal netters made tremendous hauls of the fish. One boat, its number known, caught 2,000 pounds, employing its illegal netting methods. Numbers of the other three boats are being turned over to the Maryland Fish Commission.

The boat, in making its ton catch, wiped out an entire school of bluefish being legally fished by 20 of the local anglers, who saw their expensive lines, not to mention their luscious big catches, being hauled up by the lawbreakers. And all they could do about it was swear.

Macks Outlast Chisox to Win By 13 to 11

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, Aug. 25.—The Athletics took a wild contest from the Chicago White Sox in the opener of a three-game series today, 13 to 11. Dusty Rhodes, starring as a relief pitcher, won the game in the seventh with a single that scored Frankie Hayes and Al Niemiec with the deciding runs.

Howard Comes From Behind to Take Narragansett Feature

Stretch Spurt Wins Event By Nose

Mama's Choice Second, Don Guzman 3d; Daily Double Is $120.

By the Associated Press.

Narragansett Park, Pawtucket, R. I., Aug. 25.—Howard, an odds-on choice owned by Mrs. Walter E. O'Hara, wife of the president and managing director of this track, came from far back to win the Tiverton, a mile and a furlong for 3-year-olds and up, which featured today's card here.

Howard had but a nose margin over J. S. Riley's Mamas Choice, who was half a length in front of Mrs. M. C. Breen's Don Guzman.

Mamas Choice broke out front first but was beaten in the run to the first turn by S. S. Sands' Hollyhock. Mack Garner had Don Guzman under a tight hold through the first five furlongs and ran third to Hollyhock and Mamas Choice. Through the far turn, Jockey Earl Porter moved with Howard and sent the rolled stocking gelding into the home stretch for a run at Mamas Choice, who had replaced Hollyhock in command.

Howard just got up in the last stride. Hollyhock finished fourth. The winner paid $3.50, $2.50 and $2.40. Stephen Panarella claimed Howard for $3,200.

The daily double today paid $120.20 with 175 tickets sold on the combination of Bess Tam, winner of the first, and Pretty Busy, winner of the second.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BESS TAM, $42.40, $20.40, $11.60; GAYETTE, $15.20, $9.40; KEEP GOING, $27.10.

BESS TAM, away with the leaders, drew clear in the first quarter mile, dominated the running throughout and drew out through the stretch. GAYETTE, in nearest chase of the pace from practically the outset, continued with good energy to the close. KEEP GOING, well placed, held on well in the stretch drive, though never able to endanger the first two. LOVELY DAY, outrun early, worked her way up steadily in the last three furlongs and was going willingly at the end. FOXO moved up after leaving the backstretch only to falter in the closing quarter mile. GONE WEST was unable to enter serious contention. CORKER was never a factor.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 2:56. Off at 2:58½. Winner, M. Buston's ch. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—PRETTY BUSY, $5.00, $3.80, $3.10; GOOD DAME, $49.80, $18.30; PROTEUS, $4.60.

PRETTY BUSY went to the front at once, drew clear in the run down the backstretch, was steadied along under slight restraint and held away to the end. GOOD DAME was prominently placed from the start, closed gamely under severe pressure and was up in the closing stride to outlast PROTEUS for the place. PROTEUS, in nearest pursuit of the winner from practically the beginning, continued with good courage to the close. PROSECUTOR, well placed, went at an even pace throughout. COLOR BEARER was unable to enter serious contention. SPITTEN IMAGE, well placed early, dropped back when called upon in the last five-sixteenths. GENERAL A moved up briefly on the outside approaching the stretch, though never a serious threat.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 2-year-olds. Start good. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post at 3:28. Off at 3:32. Winner, Mrs. W. H. Cane's br. f. (2), by Sickle—Be Fair. Trained by Lyman A. Brusie. Value to winner, $750; second, $150; third, $70; fourth, $30. Time, 0:23 1-5, 0:46 4-5, 1:13 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SQUARE, $32.80, $16.80, $10.20; KHAY, $11.60, $7.00; CAPT. YARBROUGH, $5.40.

SQUARE took the lead in the opening strides, increased her lead steadily, was roused several times in the stretch and drew out steadily in the last furlong. KHAY, slow to begin, worked his way up gradually and closed with good courage in the stretch run. CAPT. YARBROUGH was hard ridden in an effort to reach the leader in the first half mile, faltered in the closing drive. DUSKY MISS, outrun early, came with good speed in the final drive. CRUCIAL, prominent from the start, faltered in the last five-sixteenths. JEUNE ETOILE was well placed early and dropped back leaving the backstretch.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:00. Off at 4:04. Winner, Mrs. Haughton and Mrs. West's br. g. (5), by Pharamond II—Fast Time. Trained by Ed Haughton. Value to winner, $750; second, $150; third, $70; fourth, $30. Time, 0:23 1-5, 0:46, 1:12.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PHARATIME, $8.00, $4.20, $2.90; ARMSTRONG, $6.30, $3.40; PAKE, $3.00.

PHARATIME had speed from the start, met determined opposition from GOLD SIGNET, drew clear when the latter broke down and hard ridden through the stretch lasted to hold ARMSTRONG safe. The latter, prominent all the way, came through on the inside of the winner in the last furlong and finished with splendid courage. PAKE showed the first flight throughout, though unable to reach the leaders after leaving the backstretch. HARDWARE was unable to reach the leaders, though closing some ground. SAVINGS was unable to keep pace. SANCTITY trailed for most of way. GOLD SIGNET was racing head and head with the winner when he broke down after going almost the first half mile.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixth miles. Purse, $1,100; claiming. The Tiverton. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:35. Off at 4:35½. Winner, Araho Stables' ch. g. (5), by Rolled Stocking—Escarpolette. Trained by R. Curran. Value to winner, $825; second, $165; third, $75; fourth, $35. Time, 0:23 4-5, 0:47 3-5, 1:12 4-5, 1:38 1-5, 1:51 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—HOWARD, $3.50, $2.60, $2.40; MAMAS CHOICE, $3.40, $3.00; DON GUZMAN, $3.20.

HOWARD was slow to settle into his best stride, moved up steadily in the last three furlongs, came to the outside in the stretch and closing with a rush under punishment, was up in the closing stride. MAMAS CHOICE was kept within striking distance of the pacemaker, wore down HOLLYHOCK for the lead after passing the furlong pole and despite holding on determinedly, just failed to last. DON GUZMAN, restrained early while holding to a forward position, was unable to improve his position to any great extent in the closing drive. HOLLYHOCK outran her field to the first turn, drew away into a good lead and weakened in the last furlong.

SIXTH RACE—One and three-sixteenths miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 5:07. Off at 5:07½. Winner, Araho Stable's ch. g. (4), by Cantankerous—Tayolita. Trained by R. Curran. Value to winner, $750; second, $150; third, $70; fourth, $30. Time, 0:24 1-5, 0:49, 1:14 2-5, 1:40 3-5, 1:59 3-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—DORMIDO, $9.60, $5.50, $4.00; CUMBERLAND, $34.90, $15.90; SUN ABBOT, $7.00.

DORMIDO, as usual, slow to settle into full stride, began moving up nearing the far turn, circled his field leaving the backstretch and moving up fast in the stretch, drew out steadily in the last three-sixteenths to win handily. CUMBERLAND, outrun in the beginning, was taken back of the pace and closed with good energy through the stretch run. SUN ABBOT moved up stoutly on the outside down the backstretch, gained the lead and weakened under urging through the last furlongs. JUST REMEMBER closed some ground. BRUCEDALE had early speed and lost ground rounding the turn and faltered in the last five-sixteenths. KENDAL GREEN, prominently placed, was going willingly when he stumbled nearing the stretch.

SEVENTH RACE—One and three-sixteenths miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 5:38. Off at 5:40½. Winner, Miss Estelle Burch's blk. g. (3), by Omar Khayyam—Ragassa. Trained by H. Burch. Value to winner, $750; second, $150; third, $70; fourth, $30. Two-dollar mutuels paid—ACE OF SPADES, $92.30, $17.90, $5.80; DANCING BOY, $4.10, $3.20; BATTLING GIRL, $2.70.

ACE OF SPADES, badly outrun for first half mile, began moving up after reaching worst down the leaders in the closing strides. DANCING BOY saved ground at the far turn, moved up on the outside and closing with good energy through the stretch turn into the backstretch, worked his way up steadily gaining in the stretch, and despite hard urging, was unable to cope with the closing bid of the winner. BATTLING GIRL was restrained early, started moving up leaving the backstretch, was forced to take down her way out of close quarters midway of the turn, responded gamely, but was not good enough. HATS OFF had speed from the start, faltering in the last quarter mile.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 6:14. Off at 6:14½. Winner, Mrs. J. A. Two-dollar mutuels paid—COMING BACK, $19.10, $8.80, $5.40; BEAVER LAKE, $4.50, $3.40; CAPT. JERRY, $6.50.

COMING BACK, restrained for the first half mile, began moving up on the outside when called upon, took command in the stretch and drew clear under hard urging. BEAVER LAKE, kept within striking distance of the pace, went to the front when called on, fought it out courageously and only yielded to the winner in the last furlong. CAPT. JERRY, in the forefront all the war while saving ground, came again after being supplanted in the lead and though unable to keep up with the leaders, finished gamely. BRASS MONKEY closed a big gap. ANY CHANCE, well up, was unable to keep up.

Corn Futures Turn Upward With 2c Gain

Wheat and Rye Close Steady, While Oats Are Lower.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Aug. 25.—Corn led a brisk rally in the grain market today, closing with net overnight gains ranging up to 2 cents a bushel, while early losses of almost 2 cents in wheat were pared.

Activity in the corn pit centered on September contracts on which delivery can begin within a week. The nearby delivery shot up 2½ cents in the final hour, and while December and May corn rose sympathetically, their advance was not so pronounced.

Corn buying that included short covering was associated with advices that the Argentina government would aid farmers in holding corn in anticipation of higher prices, but market specialists asserted that the Southern Hemisphere product is not expected to be available here in sufficient quantity to be a factor in September delivery.

Wheat finished unchanged to ⅛ off, September, $1.10¾@1.10⅞; December, $1.09⅞@1.10; May, $1.08⅜@1.08¾. Oats lost ¼@⅜, December 43¾@43⅞, rye closed ⅛ off to ⅜ up and barley dropped 1½@3½. Provisions lost 8 to 12 cents.

Stocks Forge Ahead Slowly in Light Trading; Government Bonds at New Highs.

New York, Aug. 15.—New high prices were paid for nearly all the Treasury bond issues, marking a recovery from recent apprehensions of sales that might be forced by the higher reserve requirements, and possibly also a preparation for next month's financing. Stocks also continued their recovery, and while the turnover was again under 1,000,000 shares the price structure seemed firmer than it was yesterday. Foreign exchanges were steady, with sterling up a little. Grains were steady to higher. September wheat was unchanged at 110¾ cents a bushel.

Hardening of stock prices was fairly uniform. News of the day gave no particular emphasis to any division. Sugar stocks were favorites for a while, spurred by the South Puerto Rico extra dividend. Fajardo also was strong. The group gained a fraction to 2 points. Railroad shares again were mixed, in spite of the sharp gains in net income reported for July and the certainty of further increases for this month, both in freight and passenger income. Delaware & Hudson was good for more than a point. Nickel Plate preferred jumped 5 points. Santa Fe, Jersey Central and Pere Marquette worked lower. Great Northern recovered from early weakness. Illinois Central preferred reached a new high level.

Steel shares had a good following. Bethlehem, with some new financing coming along, was a feature with a rise of more than a point to almost its best price of the year. National and Crucible were prominent. United States Steel moved up a good fraction. Prices were irregularly higher in the oils, foods, tobaccos, metals, rail equipments, motor accessories and farm implements.

Motor shares could not emerge from the background. General Motors and Chrysler backed and filled. Studebaker and Hudson rose a little. Chemicals kept up with the leaders. Public utilities were firm, and Telephone climbed 2 points. Conditions were favorable for the merchandising shares. Gimbel Brothers rose into new high ground in active dealings. The preferred, with $27 in arrears, reached the best price in several years.

Amusement shares were brought forward, some of them having been well tipped around the board rooms. Loews, Warner, Columbia, Paramount and Twentieth Century were active and strong. Gains of 1 to 3 points were scored by a miscellaneous group, including American Sumatra, which was unusually active. Atlantic Gulf, at the odd-lot post, Crown Cork, Fairbanks Morse, Manville, McKeesport, Philip Morris, Starrett and Superheater.

More Taxes.

The record of corporation earnings and the considerable increase in employment over the past year or two show plainly enough that business has got a good start on recovery to a satisfactory condition. Most people are glad enough that we are on the uphill drive. They are not disposed to spend too much time discussing the question of whether credit belongs to those who "planned it that way" or whether recovery has been a natural process that has gone on in spite of New Deal handicaps.

One thing is certain: Improvement has gone too far any longer to justify the unconscionable expenditures of the Federal Government and to permit the piling up of the public debt. Yet so far no thought has been given by the Administration to the all-important question of balancing the budget. On the contrary, the country (on the eve of the elections) is being led to believe that next year at least it will have to pay no additional taxes. Nothing is said about reduced expenditures. Even greater spending is promised, with the drought as an excuse.

That means the Government is going to borrow more money than ever and allow the debt to mount. Actually, it means more than that; it means additional taxation, in spite of rather cynical promises to the contrary. Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau pointed the way to say one thing and mean another yesterday in his press interview. Nagged by the suggestion that tongues were in cheeks, he said: "The whole idea was that there will be no recommendations for new tax legislation by the Administration." Then he opened the bag and gave the cat a good kick by adding: "Of course, Congress can do what it chooses."

"Of Course."

That added little to existing knowledge of the constitutional functions of Congress, but it contributed a great deal to the workings of the New Deal mind. "Of course" taxes will be increased, and enough to threaten the business recovery, but not enough (because that looks to be impossible) to keep pace with the violent speed of the current Treasury expenditures.

Meanwhile, having passed a tax law last time that all hands round agree is most unsound—the penalty tax on undistributed corporation profits—the Administration is now claiming the resulting higher dividend distributions as a cause of the current business improvement. It seems to have escaped notice that the payments now being made were the result of the improvement that had taken place before the new tax law was passed.

It probably also will come as a surprise to the Treasury to find that most of the higher dividend distributions go to small stockholders, most of whom pay little or no taxes, and whose total payments are unlikely to rise much as a result of the larger dividends. Some time also greater appreciation may be shown for the fact that the dividends now paid out mean business is being deprived of that much new capital which it otherwise would have for its expansion.

Banks and Bonds.

Member banks are continuing to reduce their Government securities portfolios, although this week's reduction of $48,000,000 was almost wholly in Chicago, where banks have been stocking up liberally to provide investments for customers which will be exempt from the Illinois property tax upon liquid capital. Since July 1, when the reporting member banks held $9,510,000,000 of Government direct and $1,289,000,000 of Government guaranteed obligations, holdings have gone down $178,000,000 in the case of the former and $57,000,000 in the case of the guaranteed bonds. The decrease in the latter has been almost wholly because of a recent maturity of $50,000,000 HOLC bonds, which the Treasury paid off in cash without refunding.

Insurance Investment.

Apparently the insurance companies are picking up Government securities at about the same rate that the banks are letting them go, for reports in Wall Street suggest that such purchases in the week ended August 19 were about equal to the volume the banks liquidated. Insurance companies also have purchased or otherwise acquired large quantities of Government guaranteed issues, particularly Home Owners Loan Corporation bonds taken in in connection with mortgages in difficulty.

Higher Costs Offset Gains In Pay Rolls

Rising Price of Food and Rents Is Wiping Out Slender Margin.

Minneapolis, Aug. 25.—Soaring food prices and rising rents in the late summer and autumn months threaten to wipe out the slender margin which the average family's pay-check has finally established in its three-year race with living costs, according to a 1933-1936 buying power study just released by Northwestern National Life Insurance Co.

A month's supply of food for a household of four, which could be bought for $30 at average 1933 prices, cost $37.93 during the second quarter of 1936, and climbed another half-dollar in July, in spite of the brake of seasonal cheapness of fresh fruits and vegetables. With these items resuming their normal fall price rise, the entire food index can be expected to soar from the effects of drouth scarcity, the summary states.

The same class of living quarters which could be rented in 1933 for $24 a month cost almost $5 more in the second quarter of 1936—$28.93 to be exact. The further increases of 5 per cent to 10 per cent anticipated for this fall, should begin to be felt when old leases expire on the Nation's moving day, September 1.

Since 1933, earnings per family have trailed behind living costs in their upward surge—far behind in 1934, and by a smaller margin in 1935. In the second quarter of 1936, however, payrolls rose much faster than living costs, so as to close the three-year-old gap. The average family, earning and spending $120 per month in 1933, found its monthly income risen to $136.73 in the second quarter of 1936, while the same scale of living which could be supported on $120 in 1933, cost $135.14 to maintain at price levels of 1936. The family's pay-check gained over $3 from the preceding three-month period, while its living costs rose less than a dollar in the same time.

Clothing prices have increased comparatively little in the past three years, the index shows; raiment for which the family budgeted $20 in 1933, costs them $21.78 now. The cost of fuel and light is back to precisely its 1933 level, while the "sundries" item shows only a slight increase—from $15 in 1933, to $15.50 in 1936.

$50,000,000 Bills 3.95 Times Subscribed

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau announces that the tenders for $50,000,000, or thereabouts, of 273-day Treasury bills, dated August 26, 1936, and maturing May 26, 1937, which were offered on August 21, have been opened at the Federal Reserve banks.

The total amount applied for was $197,603,000, of which $50,046,000 was accepted. The accepted bids ranged in price from 99.876, equivalent to a rate of about 0.164 per cent per annum, to 99.867, equivalent to a rate of about 0.175 per cent per annum, on a bank discount basis.

Business Failures At New Low Mark

New York, Aug. 25.—Business failures reached the lowest point of the year in the week ended August 20, Dun & Bradstreet reported today.

The latest total was 135, compared with 149 in the preceding week, and 192 a year ago.

Curb Irregular In Profit-Taking

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 25.—Small-scale profit taking late in the session carried the curb market to an irregular close today. Although advances and losses were about evenly divided, gains were whittled down from the highs of the day and losses were lengthened somewhat.

Utility stocks settled fractionally lower. Electric Bond & Share proved something of an exception and worked up ⅛ to 21¾.

American Cynamid "B" and Creole Petroleum each gained, closing at 34½ and 21½, respectively. Newmont Mining was up 1 at 85, and Todd Shipyards gained 1 to 50. Jones & Laughlin Steel added 2 points to 45.

Automobiles are bought and sold every day through Post Classified Ads.

The following is merely a brief outline of certain information contained in the Offering Prospectus and is subject to the more detailed statements in the Offering Prospectus and the Registration Statement, which also include important information not outlined or indicated herein. The Offering Prospectus, which must be furnished to each purchaser, should be read prior to any purchase of these Bonds.

THE COMPANY The Company was organized in 1928 by consolidation pursuant to the laws of the State of Ohio of the original The Cincinnati Gas & Electric Company and Columbia Power Company. From the date of its organization until June 30, 1936, the Company's properties were operated under lease by The Union Gas & Electric Company. On the latter date The Union Gas & Electric Company was merged into the Company. All of the outstanding common stock (now representing 100% of the voting power) of the Company is owned by Columbia Gas & Electric Corporation. The Company is advised that as of June 30, 1936, The United Corporation owned stock representing approximately 20% of the voting power of Columbia Gas & Electric Corporation. The Company disclaims any admission of the actual existence of effective control over it by The United Corporation. The general type of business done and intended to be done by the Company is the production, purchase, transmission and marketing of electric energy, and the purchase of natural gas, the production and purchase of manufactured gas and the marketing of natural, manufactured, and mixed manufactured and natural gas in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio and certain adjacent and rural territory. Properties of the Company include two steam electric generating stations, 69 electric sub-stations, one gas manufacturing plant, electric transmission and distribution systems, gas transmission and distribution systems, and various other buildings and structures used in the conduct of its business.

BONDS OF THE 3¼% SERIES DUE 1966 These Bonds, in the opinion of Counsel for the Company, will, upon the discharge of the first mortgage securing the Series A 4% Bonds mentioned above, be secured by a direct first lien, subject only to liens, if any, for certain taxes and assessments, on all properties (with certain exceptions specified in the Indenture) owned by the Company on the date of execution of the Indenture, other than leases existing at the date of the Indenture pertaining to steam heating plants and systems. The Indenture contains provisions for the issuance of an additional $5,000,000 aggregate principal amount of bonds of the same or another series (but ranking pari passu with these Bonds) upon the request of the Company. In addition, provided certain conditions and requirements specified in the Indenture are met, the Indenture permits the issuance of additional bonds of the same or another series without limitation as to principal amount, ranking pari passu with these Bonds. The Indenture further permits the release of property from the lien thereof without notice other than application in certain instances to the Trustee and permits the substitution of certain types of property without notice. Irving Trust Company, New York City, is Trustee under the Indenture.

The provisions of the Indenture may be modified (subject to certain limitations set forth in the Indenture) with the consent of holders of 75% of the outstanding Bonds of each of the series to be affected by the proposed modification.

SINKING FUND The Indenture provides for a Sinking Fund for Bonds of the Series Due 1966, into which the Company agrees to make semi-annual payments, commencing May 15, 1937, of amounts equal to ¼ of 1% of the Bonds of the Series Due 1966 authenticated and delivered prior to the sinking fund payment date, less the amount of such Bonds theretofore retired otherwise than through the Sinking Fund. In lieu of making such payments in cash the Company may tender Bonds of the Series Due 1966 at cost to it or at the then redemption price, whichever is lower. All Bonds acquired by the Trustee for the purposes of the Sinking Fund are to be cancelled.

UNDERWRITING Subject to certain terms and conditions, the Underwriters named in the Offering Prospectus have severally agreed to purchase these Bonds from the Company at 100%, or a total of $35,000,000, plus accrued interest. Such Bonds are to be offered to the public at 102%, or a total of $35,700,000, plus accrued interest. The underwriting discount is 2%, or a total of $700,000.

Price 102% and Accrued Interest

The Underwriters have agreed to purchase these Bonds when, as and if issued, and subject to the approval of Messrs. Davis Polk Wardwell Gardiner & Reed, Counsel for the Underwriters, and to certain further conditions. The validity of the franchises of the Company and its subsidiaries, the lien of the Indenture securing the Bonds, and certain other matters, have been passed upon by Counsel for the Company. It is expected that delivery of Bonds in temporary form, exchangeable for definitive Bonds when prepared, will be made at the office of J. P. Morgan & Co. on August 31, 1936, against payment therefor in New York funds.

As more fully set forth in the Offering Prospectus, the Underwriters have authorized the purchase and sale, in the open market or otherwise, of Bonds for their several accounts, either for long or short account, within the limits and during the period set forth in the Agreement between themselves.

Further information, particularly financial statements, is contained in the Registration Statement on file with the Securities and Exchange Commission, and in the Offering Prospectus which must be furnished to each purchaser and is obtainable from the undersigned.

Peacock's 140 Wins Amateur Golf Medal

71—75—146 and David Davis, of Austin, Tex., 74—74—148.

Harry Pitt, the Manor Moose, who has qualified for a number of amateur championships, supplied the day's drama. Told that he needed a birdie on the last hole to get in, the former District champion rapped in a 15-footer for a 3, a 73 and a 151 total.

But Pitt's burst of scoring at this crucial moment, a thing of joy to the veteran Manor golfer, was dimmed out by his weird play in the play-off for the last two places with Webb and Thompson.

Driving into the trap on the first hole, Pitt got himself into double trouble, and took seven strokes as compared with the 5s posted by Webb and the bespectacled Thompson.

Pitt May Get Berth.

Along the golf front last night there were reports that Pitt might be among the Washingtonians reporting at Garden City, Long Island, for the all-match play National Championship September 14-19. Pitt, an alternate, may fill in for Dave Davis, the Texan, who, it is understood, may be forced to drop out due to the press of business.

In that case there would be nine District golfers competing at historic Garden City—Washington's largest representation.

Peacock, playing with District Municipal Champion Rippy, had everything when he scored that 67. He birdied the second and sixth and went out in 33, two under. Over on that back nine Peacock birdied the eleventh, twelfth and thirteenth; took 5s on the fourteenth and fifteenth, deuced the sixteenth. A par-4 on the eighteenth would have given Peacock a new course record, but, unfortunately, he 3-putted from 25 feet.

Peacock Has Pair of 3-Putts.

Peacock's afternoon round was marred by 3-putts at the eighth and tenth, and inaccurate approaches on the ninth and eighteenth. His second on the home hole caught a trap, costing him a 5.

It was a big day for the public links' stars. With Walter Greiner, semifinalist, qualifying Claude Rippy, the finalist was easily in the charmed circle of 12, although it took some brilliant golf on the Ripper's part to come back in the afternoon and pound out a 71, one over par, after he took a shaky 77 in the morning.

Among the favorites who failed to qualify were Ernie Caldwell, of Baltimore, with 76-77—153; Billy Dettweiler, of Congressional, with 77-75—152; Martin F. McCarthy, of Columbia, 75-78—153; Miller B. Stevinson, of Columbia, with 80-79—159.

Louis Fuchs, of Indian Springs, with a 6 on the home hole, failed with his 75-77—152.

Morton McCarthy, the Norfolk boy, went out in 41 in the morning and went two over on the next two holes. He picked up four birdies in a sensational spurt to score a 74. His afternoon 71 was a gem.

Sutemi Murayama, a Filipino lad representing Stoddard Playground, wins the 100-pound class 60-meter finals in the record time of 7 3/5 seconds in the city-wide playground meet at Central Stadium yesterday.

Little Billy Graves, of Rosedale, demonstrates the manner in which he won the 85-pound class broad jump with a leap of 15 feet 7½ inches, sans shoes.

Favorites Score In Western Golf Tourney

By the Associated Press.

Country Club, South Bend, Ind., Aug. 25.—Marion Miley, of Lexington, Ky., defending champion and co-medalist, today led a parade of the favorites through the first round of the women's Western closed golf championship.

Advancing with her into the second 18-hole round to be played tomorrow were her two international Curtis Cup teammates, Patty Berg, of Minneapolis, and Mrs. Opal S. Hill, of Kansas City; Mrs. Russell Mann, of Chicago, the former Lucille Robinson, of Des Moines; Dorothy Gustafson, of South Bend, co-medalist in the qualifying round with Miss Miley yesterday; Mrs. Gregg Lifur, of Los Angeles, southern California champion; Elizabeth Dunn, of Indianapolis, Indiana State champion, and Beatrice Barrett, long-hitting youngster from Minneapolis.

Sherwood's Team Wins Capital Meet

70-pound class; 240-meter relay, 100-pound class; broad jump and high jump, unlimited class, together with points picked up with seconds and third in numerous other events. It was their spectacular performances in the relays that clinched matters for the Westerners. So close was the meet that with two-thirds of the events disposed of only eight points separated the four leading teams.

Sutemi Murayama, a skinny little Japanese youngster with mercury in both feet, won the 100-pound, 60-meter event in record time, negotiating the distance in 7.3 seconds. The old mark of 8.4 seconds was made by M. Servator, of MacFarland, in 1933. The new unlimited 400-meter relay record is the property of the Brookland team, comprised of Willard Babcock, Jack Remington, Larry Finn and Stover Babcock. The quartet ran the distance in 48 seconds flat.

Today the annual girls meet will be held at Central High School Stadium, the games opening with a parade this morning at 10:30.

Women's Leaders Celebrate Today

The National Women's Party today will celebrate the sixteenth anniversary of the adoption of the nineteenth amendment to the Constitution, which grants women's suffrage. Leaders of the party, representing the 48 States, will go to the Washington Postoffice at 10 a. m. to purchase "first-run" stamps issued by the Postoffice Department and bearing the likeness of Susan B. Anthony, famed women's rights crusader.

Among the members of the delegation which will be greeted by City Postmaster Vincent Burke will be Mrs. Ethel Adamason, Mrs. Florence Bayard Hilles, Mis Anita Pollitzer, Miss Doris Stevens, Miss Abby Scott Baker and other Women's Party leaders. The ceremony was arranged by Miss Marie Moore Forrest.

A dinner at party headquarters at 7 p. m. tonight will further celebrate the occasion. Mrs. Hilles will preside.

1. Find the apartment that meets your requirement—in the section in which you want to live.

2. Note the key letters and the number at the end of the ad. For example: D-5.

3. Then find the letter of the alphabet (in this case, D) at the top of the map. This means the apartment is located somewhere between the D at the top and the D at the bottom of the map.

4. Then look for the numeral (in this case, 5) at either side of the map. Where the D and 5 meet is the vicinity in which the apartment is located.

Women's Bar Halts Speaker, Bans 'Politics'

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Aug. 25.—The National Association of Women Lawyers voted today to hear no more political propaganda after Francis P. Garland, Boston lawyer introduced as the bearer of the Massachusetts Bar Association, had been halted while speaking against the New Deal.

Garland had reached a point in his speech declaring "President Roosevelt, the New Deal, the communists and the reds are ruining the Constitution of the United States and ruining this country," when Rosalind Goodrich, a California delegate, jumped to her feet and told Garland his time was up.

An uproar broke out. Attorney Bates, who is a prominent Republican and head of the Republican council of Los Angeles, proposed a resolution that no political propaganda be permitted. It carried overwhelmingly.

Garland left the room as the vote was taken.

Mooney Case Up.

Boston, Aug. 25 (U.P.).—The resolutions committee will go into executive session tomorrow to consider a proposal to authorize the American Bar Association—recognized voice of the American legal profession—to investigate conviction and imprisonment of Thomas J. Mooney and Warren K. Billings for the San Francisco Preparedness Day bombing.

The group was asked today by Ben D. Diamond, New York attorney, to recommend that the association appoint a committee to study alleged abuses in their trials and subsequent appeals and if substantiated, to "render legal aid and other assistance which, in its discretion, it shall deem necessary."

Another resolution taken under consideration asked appointment of a committee "to investigate and study the origins, extent and effects of attacks against the civil rights and liberties of the American people and whether the guarantees furnished by the United States Constitution are being maintained . . ."

The resolution cited murders and floggings by the Black Legion.

Other resolutions urged reversal of the association's stand against the child labor act and proposed a constitutional amendment to enable Congress and State Legislatures to enact laws for the social and economic welfare of the United States.

The conflict heard spirited talks on "The Proper Conduct of Trials and Publicity in Relation Thereto," by Thomas D. Thacher, former United States solicitor general; Frank J. Hogan, of Washington, and Sir Wilmott Lewis, Washington correspondent of the London Times.

Thacher referred to the trial of Bruno Richard Hauptmann, executed slayer of the Lindbergh baby, as "the most notorious criminal trial in the history of the United States."

Hogan condemned the alleged practice of "trial by newspapers," but asserted it was made possible by attorneys who gave pre-trial statements, and by judges who permitted pictures and prejudicial newspaper publicity during trials.

New York Shown Slightly Republican

Lead So Small Minor Political Error Could Cost Election.

New York, Aug 25.—Two strategic reasons for Gov. Landon's speech-making tour through New York State this week are brought out by the latest Presidential poll conducted by the Institute of Public Opinion:

1. Although Landon is more popular in the State at present, according to the poll, his lead is so precarious that even a small movement of voters toward Roosevelt would put New York into the Democratic column. The institute poll gives Landon 51 per cent and Roosevelt 49 per cent of the major party vote today. Obviously the Republicans will use every effort to hold or increase this slight lead.

2. Without New York's 47 electoral votes Landon cannot win the election.

He must not only carry New York, but Illinois, Ohio, Michigan and Pennsylvania as well, the poll shows. Roosevelt, on the other hand, with his large backlog of electorial votes in the South and Far West, needs to carry only one of these States to win.

So important is New York to the Republican cause, and so uncertain the outcome in this State, that Gov. Landon plans to rally the New York Republican vote by making his last big campaign address in Madison Square Garden five days before election. When he does, he will find himself in less friendly territory than during his present tour in the northern part of the State. New York City voters are at present more than two to one in favor of Roosevelt. Elsewhere in the State it's two to one the other way.

	Roosevelt	Landon
New York City	1,519,000	733,000
Rest of State	822,000	1,727,000
Total	2,341,000	2,460,000

Roosevelt carried New York in the last election. The State began moving toward the Republican side after the Congressional elections of 1934. Whereas the Democrats received 57 per cent of the major party vote that year, by December, 1935, Institute polls showed Roosevelt at 50 per cent in New York, and Raymond Moley, one of the President's closest advisers, was conceding the State to the Republicans. The Roosevelt curve turned upward in March, however, and reached 53 per cent in June.

Then, with the nomination of Gov. Landon, it dropped five points to 48 per cent.

The State has continued to show a slight Republican lead ever since. However, the slightest political incident might upset this lead. For example, Roosevelt gained ground in the poll after Gov. Lehman announced that he would run for a third term, thus strengthening the Democratic ticket.

'Feathers Man' Flees Hospital

Frank Woody Hockaday, the "Feathers Man," escaped from St. Elizabeth's Hospital yesterday. Guards at the hospital said he got away through a window.

Hockaday, who calls himself "Chief Pow Wow," recently achieved national attention when he dumped a huge bag of feathers in the lap of Assistant Secretary of War Harry Woodring. He did it, Hockaday told police, to emphasize peace and his slogan, "Feathers instead of bullets."

John Lynch, 70-year-old blindman of 5 H street northwest, was seriously injured Monday when he stumbled and fell a short distance from his home. He was taken to Casualty Hospital where he is under treatment for a fracture of the skull.

Bishop Curley Returns.

New York, Aug. 25 (AP).—The Most Rev. Michael J. Curley, Archbishop of Baltimore, returned to the United States today on the Cunard-White Star liner Laconia after a month in Ireland visiting relatives at his birthplace, Athlone.

Judge Crater Seen In West, Is Report

Los Angeles, Aug. 25 (U.P.).—The six-year search for Joseph Force Crater, New York Supreme Court justice who disappeared in front of a Manhattan restaurant, was resumed tonight on the strength of a story told by a prospector out of the hills.

Los Angeles police said they had sent to New York for a description of Crater.

The search was based on a story told by "Lucky" Blackeit, of Santa Isabel, Calif. This was his story:

"I was walking along the road when I met an old fellow with a burro and supplies for a trip into the mountains. We sat down at the roadside to talk. After some talk about the weather and traveling he suddenly said he would tell me something.

"He said, 'I am done with civilization; one more year and they will think I'm dead; I am a supreme court judge from New York and I have been missing six years.'

"He told me had had drawn $5,000 from the bank and got into a taxicab and rode away. He said New York could go to hell."

Col. Schley Resigns Panama Canal Post

Col. Julian L. Schley, Governor of the Panama Canal Zone, has resigned, and President Roosevelt has designated Col. S. Ridley, Corps of Engineers, as his successor, the War Department announced yesterday.

Col. Schley held the Canal post since October 21, 1932. He is in Washington now on business connected with the canal. He will return at once to military duty with the corps of engineers and will be assigned to the command of the Engineers School at Fort Belvoir, Va.

Both Col. Schley and Col. Ridley have distinguished records. Col. Schley is a native of Savannah, Ga. During the World War he served in France as chief engineer of the Fifth Corps, participating in the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne offensives.

Col. Ridley was born in Corydon, Ind. During the war he was military aid to President Wilson and also had charge of public buildings and grounds in the District.

Thomas I. Pendergast Undergoes Operation

New York, Aug. 25 (AP).—Thomas I. Pendergast, veteran Kansas City political leader, underwent an abdominal operation at Roosevelt Hospital today and shortly afterward was pronounced by his physicians to be "out of any immediate danger."

Bad-Check Passer Surrenders to U. S.

Weary of supporting himself by passing bogus checks under more than 20 aliases in all sections of the Nation, Edward Rains, who has posed as a general in the Army and an admiral in the Navy, surrendered himself to the Department of Justice here, the department announced last night. He was described by J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, as one of the most notorious check passers in the country.

Rains, who had on one occasion claimed to be a Department of Justice agent, first surrendered to the police in Las Vegas, Nev., in 1934, and received a 20-month sentence at McNeils Island Federal Prison in Washington State, department records show.

He was released on parole, but a warrant for his arrest was issued in November, 1935, since he had failed to report to a parole officer.

Rains is being detained subject to trial on charges filed against him in Chicago and Atlantic City.

Woman Physician Kills Her Husband

Fort Worth, Tex., Aug. 25 (AP).—Ross Turner, 51, a salesman, was fatally wounded today after what police described as a quarrel with his wife, Dr. Grace Humphrey Hood, Fort Worth physician, in her offices in the Medical Arts Building.

Friends of the couple said Dr. Hood had filed a suit for divorce in July, but dropped it. Another separation occurred since then, they said.

Virginia Woman, 102, Has 113 Descendants

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cleveland, Va., Aug. 25.—Believed to be the oldest resident of the State of Virginia, Mrs. Noah Kiser, who on June 30 celebrated her 102nd birthday, continues active at her home 2 miles west of Cleveland, rejoicing in more than 100 living descendants, and taking an active interest in the affairs of her community.

She is the mother of 12 children, the oldest living now past 80, and has 50 grandchildren, 42 great-grandchildren, nine great-great-grandchildren and scores of other close relatives.

Mrs. Kiser, affectionately known as "Aunt Rachel," was born June 30, 1834, only a mile from her present home overlooking the Clinch River.

She has occupied her present home for 75 years, sharing it now with one of her sons, Noah, and his family. She frequently visits relatives and friends in the community.
